WELCOME TO THE ALL-NEW BIZARRE!

So, being that we're 10 years old and everything, in an effort to remain youthful and attractive we thought we'd treat ourselves to a facelift. Essentially, it's business as usual – this issue is populated with animal people, virtual punks, sexy nerds and depraved serial killers – we just look more beautiful. We've also undergone some minor liposuction to trim some fat, but in its place is a bunch of new regular features, including Bianca Beauchamp's sexy problem page, a great body-modification column from BMEzine's Shannon Larratt, the beautiful Sophie Howard modelling the A-Z of Fetish, a section by you called Get Your Tatts Out, and a whole lot more. Most importantly, you'll notice our new four page Ultra Vixen extravaganza (Bizarre Beauties RIP), also starring you – go to p40 now to find out how to be an Ultra Vixen, and go to Bizarremag.com/ultravixens to meet our girls online. This issue's free Ultra Vixens book should have already got you hot and bothered about it all, and on p51, we present the Ultra Vixens Hall of Fame, featuring exclusive contributions from Dita Von Teese, Courtney Love, Tura Satana, Bianca Beauchamp, Betty Curse, and Belladonna. Boys and girls, it doesn't get any better than this.

Bye,
The Editor

Artist Juan Cabana creates freaky mermaids with fish skin, teeth and bones from fish markets. We had no room for any more photos this issue, so this little guy is stuck here on this page with me. I'll take good care of him

Big cat attack

Looking at these toe-curling pictures, it's hard to side with the angry leopard that strayed into the Indian town of Nasik, 180km from Mumbai, in January. But while the spotted intruder sank its teeth into at least four locals who tried to capture it during a seven-hour rampage, the animal was eventually beaten to death by residents wielding sticks and iron bars. Ironically, leopards are protected under the Indian Wildlife Act, and killing them is punishable by up to six years in prison.

Getting the hump

As if the embarrassment of being draped in tinsel like some sort of hairy Christmas decoration wasn't bad enough, this poor camel had to suffer the indignity of its throat being slit in front of a clamouring crowd as part of the Muslim Eid al-Adha festival in Karachi, Pakistan. The festival, which took place in January, sees sheep, goats, camels and cows being slaughtered to commemorate Prophet Abraham's willingness to sacrifice his son on God's command.

Holy day on ice

If you have grim memories of the draughty halls, uncomfortable pews and tedious sermons you were forced to endure as a child, spare a thought for the congregation of Romania's first ice church. The church, situated in Balea Lac, 300km northwest of Bucharest, opened its glacial doors in January, and this photograph shows two frosty priests conducting a Christian service to celebrate Epiphany.

Clever Squirt

Like an excitable child on Christmas morning, Squirt the octopus couldn't wait to open his present when staff at Newquay's Blue Reef Aquarium in Cornwall lowered the shiny package into his tank. The thrilled cephalopod wasted no time in ripping the paper from its glittering gift, using all eight arms to reveal the tasty goodies inside. Squirt, who has a 3m arm-span, is no stranger to reverse-Houdini antics, having already mastered the opening of a perspex safe to snaffle the food inside.

FILTHY HABIT

Hello, you cowardly bunch of tossers,

You do this to me every time. Each time you print an issue that looks back over your marvellous past, you tell us, "The most extreme pics we've ever printed, inside." LIARS. Ten years and not once have you reprinted the full-frontal picture of the pissing nun from Bizarre 45's Extreme Quarterly.

Now, I've got to admit I missed Bizarre 46, so I didn't see how much shit, if any, you guys got into, or how many apologies, retractions or legal battles you had to deal with, but I LOVED that picture above all the other scary/freaky/dirty/screwed-up stuff you ever printed.

Thing is, I've got so much crap in my house that I keep misplacing my copy and can't prove to non-believers that the picture exists. Show us once more that glassy stare. That middle-aged, fishnet-wearing nun diligently holding the pot. That stream of gold being blessed by a further satanic wimple-wearer.

Other than that, I've loved and read your mag for years and tried to spread the infection to as many people as I can.

It's been fun so far. Keep it up, you yellow bastards.

Munqi-boi the bakerman xx, Chingford

As we're sure you know, Mr Munqi, we can't show the naughty bits in a family magazine like Bizarre (when we originally printed it, in May 2001, we should also have censored it!), but hopefully this will slake your thirst…

BIRTHDAY MESSAGE

Just a quick email to say congratulations on 10 years of Bizarre magazine.

I remember standing in WHSmith in Nuneaton on a wet Saturday afternoon 10 years ago, with the first issue of Bizarre in my hands, thinking to myself, "This looks like it could be a good read." Now here we are, all those years later, and it's still as interesting, funny, thought-provoking and, as the name suggests, bizarre as ever. Here's a photo of Sally, my other half, reading the 10th anniversary issue while sitting on my collection (as she often does).

Here's to the next 10 years! Not only are we both looking forward to seeing every page, but hopefully by then it'll give me something to sit on as well.

Cheers!

Andy and Sal, by email

GIANT LASSES

I like tall, muscular, Amazonian women wearing heels. I like seeing pictures of them towering over small men like me (I'm 4ft9in).

Maybe a tall woman from my area would like to contact me through the magazine? Goddess Severa would be great, ha ha!

SHIT JEWELLERY

As a purveyor of peculiar things, I thought you might be interested in my poo pearls. They're beautiful necklaces of poo, which I'm sure your readers would love.

I started making my poo jewels because the world is up to its neck in shit. I wanted to be free from the constraints of soulless, plastic factories, and to wear poo with pride.

They're made from recycled material and make fabulous conversation pieces. When you put on one of my poo accessories, everyone will want to be your friend! Please visit my site to see more.

Forget diamonds and pearls – poo necklaces are the height of bling

FAMILY AFFAIR

Also pictured is our four-year-old daughter, Jess, who isn't allowed to look inside the issues, for obvious reasons. She did, however, insist on wearing her Halloween costume for the photo, so maybe she knows more than we think!

All my friends find James's collection a little odd, but it's why I love him so much. I even bid on a couple of missing issues on Ebay as I knew he wanted to complete his collection. And, if I'm honest, I often find myself reading a couple of the articles as well!

UK HORROR

Thanks, Bizarre. Your mag allows me to step outside the safe box a lot of us live in, and see the things we wouldn't normally have the chance to see.

I'm Weird Jim, and I'm currently making a low-budget indie horror film which I'm writing and directing. My good friend Dave is helping me out as cameraman, editor and assistant director.

The film is going to be a kind of English Texas Chain Saw, but more graphic, offensive and strange. In it I play a character called Hamish, and he's like Leatherface on speed. We hope to draw on other influences from other films, but have only begun shooting. We've just finished the two main torture scenes, which look pretty good for a low-budget film; the performance by Tom in the second scene was amazing, especially as he's had no acting experience. What he gets up to will certainly offend.

Anyway check us out at Myspace.com/animalsoupfilm.

Bye for now!

Weird Jim, by email

This man has two semi-erect cocks sticking through his earlobes. Of course, we can't show you that without being arrested, but you can see the uncensored picture at Bizarremag.com

COCK-EARED

I've been stretching my ears for the past three years. When I finally got them to an inch-and-a-half, I ate some ecstasy and put some penises through them and took a picture, thereby fulfilling one of my life goals. They're now at 2in, and I hope to soon be able to fit two in each ear. Four dicks total.

Phillip, by email

PS, The big one got a blowjob through my ear. It sounded weird.

GOREGRIND

I saw my good friends Vomit Slit (Bizarre 118) recently bombarding your magazine, and thought I'd add to their cause.

This is Mike from the super-perverted gore/porngrind band Vaginal Necrosis (Myspace.com/vaginalnecrosis). I know that many of us gore warriors are fans of Bizarre magazine, so you should dedicate a whole issue (or at least half a page) to us. However if that's not possible you could do the humane thing and send me some porn.

Mike the Cunt, via email

Mr Cunt, anyone can buy dodgy old porn – we're sure you'll prefer your amazing pen.

Nymphomania

How this girl's sex-addiction is destroying her life

The first time I saw these pictures I thought the story was going to be that this girl was more in touch with her sexuality than most, and couldn't care less who knew it. But it's not quite like that. Michelle's body art is a substitute for the "aggressive sexual addiction" she's had since she was 13, but never really got control of. And she tells the same kinds of stories most long-term addicts do if you dare ask them where it all went wrong: Shame, death, broken relationships, suicide attempts, shame, more shame and a lousy nickname. Michelle is known by some as The Pass Around Girl.

"When someone pays attention to me I start to focus on them," she tells us about her addiction. "I find myself making sure I'm in places I know they'll be, and I bait them for more compliments. It turns sexual rather fast, until the male starts pressuring me for sex. At this point I'm so fixated on sex that I can't help it any more. I am, according to every professional I've seen, the most sexually addicted female they've ever met."

Michelle goes on to describe herself as "basically unemployable" and friendless because of her compulsion. "I have no ability to have or keep friends," she says. "I'll move to have sex with anyone I come into contact with on a daily basis. One hundred per cent of the time." Michelle's condition has driven her to a few (failed) suicide attempts, and it's never long before that kind of behaviour effects others as well. "I mentally abused my first husband with my 'I can do whatever I want' attitude," she admits. "After having sex with his best friend, I filed for divorce to prevent him from being too mad at me. He killed himself a few days after I filed." Michelle has also lost every job she's had because of her addiction.

The tattoos were an attempt at regaining control. "I felt a huge drive to have sex with some people I really should have stayed away from. Since I was trying to curb my sexual aggression, I used getting ink as a replacement. It worked for a while," she says. Her first "sexual-type tattoo" (the 'Cum Slut' one) was done about a year ago, and she's been having them done monthly ever since.

One of her blog entries reads: "I've tattooed my pussy, my tits, my ass and anything else that would make my drive for sex feel better, even if just for a few hours. My pussy demands attention several times a day. It makes me do stupid things that I regret horribly. At times, I'm just sitting in wetness and cannot work or think of anything except having sex. I go to work with lingerie under my clothes, buttplugs in my asshole and dildos to fuck myself with several times a day."

As for what her future will involve, Michelle isn't sure, but there'll definitely be more tattoos. "I plan to get more… and they will be sexually specific." Even though most people are "rather shocked" by them and some even "aggressively offended".

"I GO TO WORK WITH LINGERIE UNDER MY CLOTHES, BUTTPLUGS IN MY ASSHOLE, AND DILDOS TO FUCK"

At the moment, Michelle is about a month 'sober', but also admits she has had "issues" with her addiction of late. And although she thinks she can beat it, there's a chance she might fail. "I've never been able to control my addiction," she says. "At times I think it's under control, and at others I'm aware I have no control at all. It pretty much sucks."

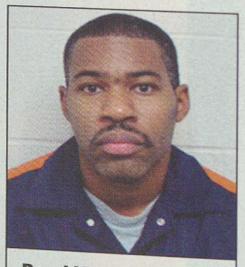
Mannequin Man

Man faces life in jail for plastic-lady fetish

In the 1987 film Mannequin, a window-dresser named Jonathan Switcher falls in love with a mannequin that comes to life in his presence. This is somehow made possible because she's the reincarnation of an Egyptian princess who lived in 2514 BC. In case you hadn't figured it out, it's mostly nonsense. I only mention it to point out one of the odder instances of life mirroring art, if you extend the definition of 'art' to incorporate a film about which one reviewer said: "It might be centuries before its radioactive awfulness dies down enough to make it watchable, even as kitsch." You see, right now, living and walking among us, there's a real-life Jonathan Switcher, struggling to keep his mannequin-loving impulses under control. His name is Ronald Dotson. And he's in a lot of trouble.

To date, Dotson has six convictions for stealing mannequins. The first arose from an incident in 1993, when he was found enjoying the company of three mannequins wearing lingerie in an alley behind the women's clothes shop he'd just stolen them from. In 2000, Ron was again convicted of stealing a mannequin, this time one wearing a pink dress and a blonde bob wig. And his latest indiscretion took place on 9 October last year when, less than a week after he'd been released from jail, fate's cruel hand ushered him once more into temptation. Right in front of him, in the window of a cleaning store, was a plastic babe filling out a French maid's uniform in all the right places. Showing all the self-restraint of Amy Winehouse at a free bar, Dotson is alleged to have smashed the window and run off with his new love; only to be arrested and charged with theft.



Ronald Dotson simply can't keep his paws off those delicious dummies

Why doesn't he get his own mannequins rather than stealing them? Apparently, that's not the same. "He told his parole officer he was going to buy a mannequin so he didn't have to do these break-ins," Detective Brendan Moore says. "But it didn't work out."

And there's a tragic twist: Since Dotson is classed as a habitual offender, he faces life in jail if found guilty. "Jail didn't help Mr Dotson," says his lawyer, Edward Cohn. "He got out of prison and he was right back out there. It's pretty bizarre." James Doorne

RUBBISH PSYCHIC

The reappearance of US teenager Shawn Hornbeck, who was missing for four years, wasn't great news for everyone, especially famous US psychic Sylvia Browne, who'd told his parents – on TV, no less – that he was dead. "I'm terribly sorry this happened," she said after he was found. "I've said thousands of times, I'm not God."

ROBOT WASP KILLER

Israel is attempting to create a robot the size of a wasp that could follow and kill people, according to The Sydney Morning Herald. They quoted ex-PM Shimon Peres as saying that the war in Lebanon proved that smaller weaponry was needed. "It's illogical to send a plane worth $100 million against a suicidal terrorist. So we are building futuristic weapons," he says.

VERY BIG KID

Twenty-nine-year-old Neil Havens Rodreick II found himself in trouble when he pretended to be a 12-year-old boy called Casey Price to enrol at a local school. The school noticed something wasn't quite right and called the police. "This is the weirdest case I've seen in 18 years," sheriff's spokeswoman Susan Quayle says. "If it wasn't so sad, it would be funny."

Santa goes topless. And more!

Julie Atlas Muz attempts to kick Doctor Donut's chocolate éclair clean off

What's better than tits and laughter? Absolutely nothing. That's why genius Fred Kahl created the wonderfully fun and entertaining burlesque TV gameshow This Or That!, where contestants from the audience compete in sexy contests for useful prizes such as dildos and Hello Kitty vibrators, by disrobing and nearly engaging in a full-on orgy. Host Fred and his beautiful co-host Julie Atlas Muz bring all the camp and bad jokes of 70s gameshows to life with their brilliant comedic timing. The shows are recorded monthly, live in Brooklyn.

The night I attended was their Christmas show, and it opened with a girl named Bambi (renowned artist Indian Larry's widow), who, dressed as a chicken, laid a golden egg out of her vagina to open the show. Next, five men and women were brought onto the stage and asked to give their most convincing orgasm. The best two, as determined by the audience – a young thin emo kid named Kyle and a goofy French woman named Victoria looking "to have a human experience" – won and were kept onstage. I believe the French woman won because she asked for it "country style", whatever the hell that means. Then a topless chick in a Santa hat and beard did a striptease, which was rather disturbing.

Behind one of the stage curtains, two naked female elves made out for our viewing pleasure. The two competitions were food-based: suck all the stripes off a 24in candy cane and then a sexy banana-eating contest. Surprisingly, Kyle won both, and ultimately earned himself a penis pump and a flogging whip, but not before he stripped down to his socks and boxers and made his banana disappear inside one of the sexy, curvaceous This Or That! girls, then went down on her to clean up the mess. I have to admit it was the most fun I've ever had in an evening in my life, even more fun than my wedding night.

This or That! is held regularly in Williamsburg, Brooklyn, and broadcast on various public-access TV channels across the USA. To see more, or to buy DVDs, go to Thisorthat.tv Chris Nieratko

ASK BIANCA

EVERY MONTH, OUR VERY OWN FETISH GODDESS ANSWERS YOUR MOST PROBING QUESTIONS...

Q I'm 23, and was wondering if it is a normal age to be a fetishist, or if participants are usually older?
Michael Peters, Stockport

A The real question you have to ask is "Does this fetish make me happy?" If the answer is yes, then what's the problem? When I was studying to become a teacher, the department found out about my Latex website and I was given the choice of closing my site or being kicked out of school. Kick me out? Screw them! I walked out! A lot of people criticised my decision to pursue modelling, especially my mother. To her, it wasn't normal to abandon security and regular pay in favour of a bohemian life. But it's up to you to decide what to do. If you want to be 'normal', you might end up like a sheep, following others while dreaming of a different lifestyle.

Q I've been into Latex for as long as I can remember, but while my partner is into bondage, she has no idea about the world of Latex. Any idea how to turn her on to it a bit?
AWF, Edmonton

A I get asked this question a lot. When I first saw Latex at a sex shop, my man got so excited it freaked me out. I thought I was losing my seductress power over him and felt kind of beaten by rubber. Humans can get very insecure when it comes to change. I left the store thinking I was angry with my boyfriend, while in fact I was angry with myself for being scared of Latex. And because I don't like being scared, I secretly bought the dress… and soon found myself in love with rubber.

Now, your partner. You could start by showing her photos of Latex clothing and tell her how sexy she'd look in it. Ladies love fashion. If she opens up on the idea of Latex and you buy her a piece, pick something she will like, even if it's not necessarily what you want her to wear. Gasmasks could scare her off! Be patient and don't rush anything. After all, you're already lucky to have an open-minded lady who's willing to tie your ass up!

BLACK-MAGIC BEATINGS!

DRC

Voodoo Wrestling!

Eye-eating and referee-paralysing violence

Way down deep in the middle of the Congo, something sinister is taking place. Wrestling at Martyrs Stadium in Kinshasa has some things in common with its American WWE cousin; the crowd scream and shout, the sound of drums and trumpets blast out from tinny speakers, and anticipation hangs heavy as the competitors climb into the ring. But from here on, things get very different.

The African fighters use voodoo techniques to vanquish their rivals: they'll 'eat' the eye of their adversary, paralyse the referee, and put their opponent into a trance. One combatant, Edingwe, will lug a trunk full of 'magical powers' with him into the ring. Despite being old, he's still the man to beat, legendary in the country for once opening up his opponent's stomach, only to repair it a few minutes later.

Of course, these men are using trickery and showmanship, just like their counterparts in America. The difference here is that in contrast to the cartoonish antics of the US mat-flatteners, these fighters are playing with real ancient beliefs, incorporating black-magic elements from their country's history in their fights.

Sadly, as the DRC (Democratic Republic of Congo) has fallen into disarray, so has the sport. No-one is in charge, and the fighters have formed their own clubs, often along political lines. Here's hoping as the country gets back on its feet, the new government makes the re-establishment of their fine wrestling tradition a priority. Kate Hodges

Museum Of Monsters

Have a poke round a serial killer's sitting room

Who in their right mind would want to look around a police museum? Seriously, who other than the most inadequate special constable would even think about it? And in case you thought it couldn't possibly be as dull as it sounds, in New York at the moment they have a special exhibition, Behind The Green Lights: A Look Inside An Early 20th Century Stationhouse, which frankly sounds duller than spending the afternoon walking around an exhibition of Ben Fogle's favourite photographs of fog.

So you have to admire the marketing savvy of Mexico City's police museum, who have relaunched their exhibition by devoting it to laughable waxworks of infamous killers. The self-guided tour imparts information on who the waxworks are of, and what each person's crimes were. Jack the Ripper, Albert Fish, Andrei Chikatilo and John Wayne Gacy are all represented – Mr Ripper and Gacy with wax renderings of the remains of their victims.

There's also a special room dedicated to Mexican serial killers – including Juana Barraza, a pro female wrestler arrested in 2005 for murdering 10 elderly women – and wax replicas of execution chambers where the criminals were put to death.

"The goal of the exhibit is to make people think about the dark side of humankind, which can only be fought through peace and harmony by people the world over," says forensic expert Pedro Estrada.

The museum, which never used to be popular, is now drawing 3,500 people a day. James Doorne

YOUR MONTHLY GUIDE TO THE WORLD OF BODY MODIFICATION

As nerve signals travel towards your mind, they're just raw information, out of context other than the biological 'instrument' readings they represent. It's not until they get to the brain that the decision is made to interpret them as pain, pleasure, or something in between. What most people feel as pain is simply 'more sensation' – it feels good until it goes too far. With training and willpower, these intense feelings can be felt as exhilarating ecstasy rather than horrific torture.

My friend C got a little too drunk at his office party, and he played out his testicle-juicing fantasy in front of his horrified (but thankfully intoxicated) co-workers.

If you're wondering, he didn't get fired – he went home with the boss (discreetly). Moral of the story? You never know who.

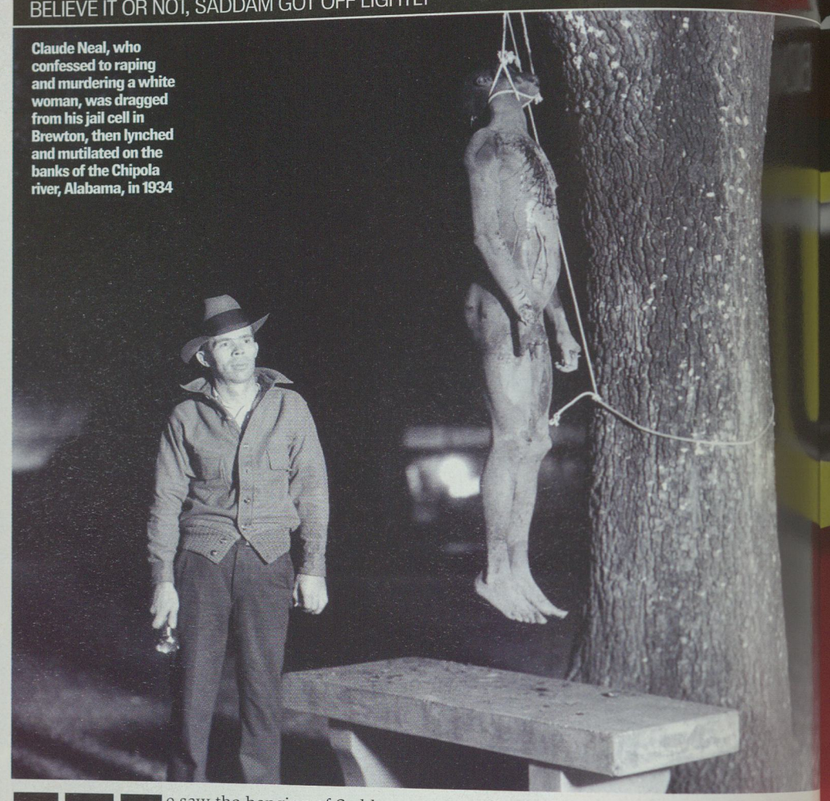
BIZARRE INVESTIGATES... HANGING

BELIEVE IT OR NOT, SADDAM GOT OFF LIGHTLY



Claude Neal, who confessed to raping and murdering a white woman, was dragged from his jail cell in Brewton, then lynched and mutilated on the banks of the Chipola river, Alabama, in 1934

We saw the hanging of Saddam Hussein and thought you might like to know that, despite the way it can sometimes look, there is a science and an art to hanging someone – it isn't as simple as wrapping some rope around the soon-to-be-deceased's head and pushing them off something.

Having said that, the science isn't always applied in modern-day hangings, and the old-fashioned 'short drop' and 'suspension' hangings are still sometimes used, despite most countries abandoning them for being inhumane. The former involves putting someone on something not very high – horses used to be popular – and then moving whatever they were on, leaving the person dangling as they were strangled to death. 'Suspension' hanging, or tying the noose around someone's neck and lifting them off the ground, achieves much the same result.

But in a modern hanging, where the emphasis is on causing as little suffering as possible, you're trying to render the person unconscious before they die, which is achieved by inflicting a fracture dislocation of the neck and severing the spinal cord, which causes paralysis, instantaneous loss of sensation and (hopefully) immediate unconsciousness. A high cervical fracture is what you're hoping to cause, and a fracture that occurs between the C1 and C2 vertebrae is known as a 'hangman's fracture', however it occurs.

When suspension and short-drop hangings were phased out they were replaced by the 'standard drop', where a drop of anything from 4ft-8ft was used for more or less everyone. Whether it broke people's necks was hit and miss, and stories of people squirming on the gallows were common, as were tales of people having their heads torn right off.

HANGINGS WERE HIT AND MISS, AND IT WAS COMMON FOR CRIMINALS TO SQUIRM AS THEY DANGLED

But the standard drop evolved into the 'long drop' method, which calculates the falling distance needed to break a person's neck, taking into account the force created by their weight, and is guaranteed to cause the fracture dislocation that leads to suffocation. Brain death occurs six minutes later, and whole body death within 15 minutes. For people of eight-and-a-half stone, a drop of 8ft6in is required. For someone weighing 10 stone, a drop of 7ft2in should do the trick. And for someone of 14 stone, just 5ft2in should be sufficient. James Doorn

A IS FOR... ALIENS

Technically speaking, if you have an alien fetish, or 'an abnormal attraction for beings from worlds beyond Earth', then you are an exophile. And back in April 2005 we told you all about exophiles and their fantasies; people like 31-year-old Liz, who wanted nothing more than to be impregnated with alien spawn: "My fetish is for alien or tentacle-creature rape, forced impregnation, and alien birth or egg-laying... My first fetish-related memory is of becoming aroused as a little girl when watching a television programme about male seahorses becoming pregnant. The swollen belly, the odd idea of an unnatural pregnancy... it was very erotic to me, even at a young age."

And she wasn't alone. Some men have vivid alien fantasies, too. James, a 39-year-old computer programmer from California, told us: "My dream lover is a giant green-and-yellow spidery creature. Her legs span about 12ft when they're stretched out as wide as they go."

If you're just extraterrestrial-curious, and want to see if interspecies sex gives you a fuzzy feeling down below, you might want to check out Funny-games.biz/aliensex.html where you can select which of the four animated, slimy, amorphous monsters fucks the animated, miniskirted brunette, and how fast they do it. James Doorne

Every year, Las Vegas is assaulted by an avalanche of the porn industry's biggest stars for the Adult Video News (AVN) Awards. And this year, for the first time, Joe Public was invited to rub bodyparts with fake-breasted babes, chiselled hunks, and Ron Jeremy.

Instead of long, elegant gowns swishing up the red carpet, we were presented with skimpy see-through dresses, overstyled hair, and towering glass stripper heels. Rockstars Dave Navarro and Gene Simmons presented 116 awards for a whole host of categories, including Best Anal Scene, Most Outrageous Scene, Best Specialty Series in the Squirting category, and let us not forget Transsexual Performer Of The Year, which went to our favourite female-to-male, Buck Angel.

Interestingly, actor Dustin Diamond (Screech in Saved By The Bell) was in attendance, holding his head high after the 'accidental' leaking of a home video showing him and two ladies exchanging Dirty Sanchezs. We also spied some other familiar characters, often seen in the pages of this magazine. Bizarre covergirl Tera Patrick and Mistress Rhiannon mingled with big names such as Erik Everhard, Vince Voyeur and, of course, Arnold Schwartzenpecker. As the night descended into a blur of fake breasts and heavily applied lipgloss, it became shockingly clear that, for entertainment value, the AVN Awards beats the Oscars hands down.

The Prince of Jackass on horse poo and death

WORDS JAMES DOORNE

What's the strangest thing you've had in your mouth?
I ate a piece of horse shit in New Orleans for Jackass. It was dried up because it'd been there for a week to 10 days, so most of the shit flavour had disappeared, thank God. It was still pretty disgusting and had that little bit of shit smell to it. It tasted like I was eating a crappy flavoured piece of dried dirt.

Did it make you ill?
I barfed as soon as I ate it, so they never even showed it on Jackass. That day they pulled a king cobra out on me, and I hate snakes. I got shot with paintballs, then I ate a piece of shit. And then I climbed through alligators in this mud pit. I was just so pissed about the entire day that I felt ill for a long time afterwards. I was like, "Fuck this Jackass shit, I want to go home now!" I was scared from the snakes, sick from the shit and hurt from the paintballs; the whole day sucked. It took me at least four days to recover.

Do you collect anything weird?
I collect a shit-load of porn. I did an interview with Hustler a few weeks ago and they told me they could send me free porn. I was like, "Send me the craziest shit you have! I want fat fucks! I want transvestites! I want people sticking two fists up an ass!" They sent me everything. Some of it's too crazy for me. I got caught red-handed watching tranny porn by my fiancée. I was like, "I was just curious!" I didn't really like it to tell the truth.

Have you ever been obsessed with anyone?
Yeah. When I was 20 I flew to Finland for this skate contest and I was obsessed with the singer from HIM. Every HIM song I heard was the best ever, and he had this massive tattoo of thorns on his arm and I thought it was the coolest thing. I thought he wrote the coolest music and he was the coolest dude in the world, so I went and got two tattoos exactly the same and flew to London to go meet him. Then I kind of regretted getting the tattoos because it's such a fucking fan thing to do, but by then it was already too late. We wound up being really good friends, but I guess at the time it was kind of weird. But now I have so many other tattoos it doesn't really matter. That was definitely the most obsessed I've ever been with anybody.

Do you have any phobias?
I hate snakes and spiders. I got bitten by this Brown Recluse spider in Spain and my whole fucking leg turned gross and wrinkly like a fucking 70-year-old man's. And then it started getting this big hole. The hole was half an inch big and you could see right into it. You could almost see the bone it was so wide open, and it just kept getting worse and worse. If I hadn't taken medicine, my leg would have just decayed. I flew to Spain to do a skateboard contest, but I couldn't even do it because my leg was rotting. I hated spiders already, and I used to step on them and kill them. I don't know if that's karma biting me on the ass. Or on the leg. It could've been karma biting me on the leg.

Talking of killing animals, what's the largest animal you've ever killed?
I'd just got this brand new BB gun and was shooting all kinds of things. I was shooting my uncle's van windows from like a hundred feet away. I was like, "Man, I can shoot anything with this thing!" And then this cute sparrow landed on my deck and I just aimed at it.

No!
I just wanted to shoot at it. I didn't want to hit it – I just wanted to shoot in that vicinity to see if it would fly away or be all stressed out. But I hit it right in the belly and it just dropped dead. I was like, "I'm going to hell!" I went skating later that day for a photoshoot, and as I was doing a trick I thought, "I'm going to end up twisting my ankle because I killed that bird." And then, sure enough, I twisted the shit out of my ankle and was out for two weeks. I think that was karma because I killed a bird for no reason.

I think that's exactly what happened. Murderer.
I'll never aim my BB gun at another bird.

What's the closest to death you've ever come?
The Bloodhound Gang live right near me in Pennsylvania, and when they were filming Cribs they asked me if I'd be part of it and drive a car into a moat. They said that there was a seven-foot drop into the moat, and the moat was seven foot deep. I drove the car into the moat and stood on top as it was sinking, but when I jumped into the moat I only rotated one half of the car and went in headfirst. And the fucking moat was only three feet deep, with these major sharp rocks. I split my head open and the cut was literally six to seven inches long. It was gushing blood, and the closest hospital was 40 minutes away. I was losing blood and fading in and out of consciousness. I made it to the hospital in time, but I thought I was going to die. The doctor said that if the moat had been two feet deep rather than three feet, then I would've snapped my neck and been completely dead. I had to get 15 staples in my head. That hurt like hell. It was like the worst pain ever.

Do you ever hear voices in your head?
No, but one time in Los Angeles I had this voice in my head in a hotel room. It wasn't like waking up from a dream – it was really happening. It was just saying gibberish and making no sense at all, and it was so loud in my head that I was contemplating jumping off the fucking balcony to get rid of it. I called my girlfriend and was like, "I have fucking voices in my head! It's going to go on forever and I can't take it! I'm going to kill myself and jump off this fucking thing right now just to get rid of it!" It was some evil woman in my fucking head. It was so strange. Thank God it only lasted three minutes. Hopefully that was the last time that'll ever fucking happen.

If you had to have sex with an animal, what would it be?
I don't know if I could do it. I guess a sheep. People fuck those, don't they? I'd have to put five condoms on.

Chiaki Kuriyama

A product of the dodgy child-model boom in 1990s Japan, we first encountered Chiaki as the jackknife-wielding girl in Battle Royale. But it's as another psycho schoolgirl that she's most fondly remembered. In Tarantino's Kill Bill Vol 1 she played Gogo Yubari, the weapon-swinging assassin in a tartan miniskirt and blazer. With evil eyes peeping under her heavy fringe, coltish limbs and knowing smile, Chiaki is the go-to girl for savage sexiness. KH

Warbling whippersnapper Betty has been touted by her label as a "real-life Emily Strange". Her gothy punky pop is tickling the charts, and her poisonous looks are tickling your fancy. In a former life, Betty was Megan Burns, who played Hannah in zombie-but-not-zombie Brit movie 28 Days Later. We grabbed her for a

How does it feel to be voted one of our Ultra Vixens all-time icons?

"I don't really think of myself as a vixen – it's bizarre, to borrow the magazine's title. Nice, though! I read Bizarre myself, and I'd much rather be with these girls than the ones voted for in most other magazines."

Who are your heroines?

"Cyndi Lauper is an inspiration – she's always been herself. Bettie Page is one of the sexiest women of all time. She was so glamorous, and portrayed herself as being a very sexual woman without having to totally spread her legs. She wasn't slaggy, she was always well-presented, and always wore heels. How a woman should be! I really like Vivien Leigh – proper old Hollywood chic. I'd pick her over Marilyn Monroe because she seems to be more her own woman. Brigitte Bardot, Mia Farrow – they're great too."

Vampira

The undead queen of horror hosts, the original and best. With her iconic gothic style, sardonic wit and eye-popping hourglass figure, Vampira was the fantasy of ghoulish guys and gals across the globe in the 1950s. Her enduring appeal was cemented with her starring role as the corpse bride of Bela Lugosi in Ed Wood's Plan 9 From Outer Space.

"Vampira was an instant success," Maila Nurmi, the 85-year-old actress behind the black wig and haemorrhage-red fingernails, tells us. "I had fanclubs all over the world, even though the studio didn't spend any money on publicity. They didn't have to, because the writers loved to write about her. Nobody had ever looked liked that." MB

Bridget the Midget

Bridget's father walked out as he couldn't handle his daughter being a midget, and in her youth people always took the piss. But Bridget embraced her size, becoming one of the world's most famous little people, with a successful porn career, a band, and a child. And she looks amazing, single-handedly creating a generation of midget fetishists. JD

Grace Jones

... went beyond androgyny. You didn't even know if she was human, let alone male or female. She was defiant and proud in the middle of 80s popular culture: at the top of the charts and starring in Bond films. Her behavioural boundaries blurred into anarchy – she slapped BBC talkshow host Russell Harty and got her chiselled knockers out at a concert at Disney World. The ultimate dominatrix. KH

DOUGLAS KIRKLAND/CORBIS

Louise Brooks

Born into the jazz age, but looking fresh and modern with the aloof expression and bob haircut she popularised, Louise Brooks blazed a trail for liberated, emancipated women… and made some very-rude-for-the-time films. KH

Poison Ivy, The Cramps

For 30 years, Poison Ivy Rorschach has reigned as the dark queen of rock'n'roll. Along with the "love of her life", Lux Interior, Ivy and The Cramps have played the sleaziest music on the planet, fusing the real-gone spirit of 50s rockabilly with the fire and passion of punk, creating a mutant musical strain that kickstarted the goth and psychobilly subgenres. Yet even after three decades on the road, former dominatrix Ivy hasn't compromised one jot, and was last seen in the UK in 2006, wearing sky-high heels and sneering at the audience in London's Astoria theatre. DM

Belladonna

Belladonna never fitted the dumb Barbie stereotype of a pornstar. Unconventionally stunning-looking – heavily tattooed with a gap in her front teeth and sometimes shaven-headed – she was at least five years before her time. These days, alt-porn is huge, but back then, being Belladonna wasn't an easy choice to make. "I'm very surprised to make the list. It's very flattering," she tells us. "The type of women I look up to are the type of women I feel I can learn something from, and who, when they've gone through so much, are still strong and becoming better every year. I always look to better myself mentally – I'd like to be stronger every year.

"As far as the adult industry goes, I'd definitely include Nina Hartley in the Ultra Vixen hall of fame. Every time I've spoken to her she's blown me away, just the way she talks, what she knows. She really looks out for you. If you were asking me for a regular celebrity, I'd pick Angelina Jolie. I look up to her in a way. Remember years ago? She was out there and crazy, but I still loved her. I was in a similar place to her back then. I'm blown away with her journey, from when she was 26 to now. It's amazing." JD

MICHAEL MULLER/CORBIS OUTLINE

19 Wonder Woman

Wonder Woman co-creator William Moulton Marston saw her as a reinvention of the bland stereotype of femininity: "Not even girls want to be girls so long as our feminine archetype lacks force, strength and power. Not wanting to be girls, they don't want to be tender, submissive, peace-loving as good women are. Women's strong qualities have become despised because of their weakness. The obvious remedy is to create a feminine character with all the strength of Superman, plus all the allure of a good, beautiful woman."

Wonder Woman has superhuman strength and stamina, and a lasso of truth, all neatly wrapped up in a superhero costume that includes knee-high boots and hotpants. And that's every honest man's lonely-hearts ad. JD

18 Willow

While most people were drooling over reluctant vampire-slayer Buffy or fuckable ditz Cordelia, Willow was transforming from ginger wallflower into contemporary superheroine. Sexy geeks with superpowers will always be cool. It takes a certain type of person to have a sex-change at 17, and then work as a dominatrix after running away from a failing marriage. Not only does she look like someone's grafted a model's face onto Jessica Rabbit (which is an exceptionally good look for anyone), she's also into the same odd stuff you are. Marlene Dietrich

German-born Marlene, queen of the Golden Age of Hollywood, is the most glamorous woman ever to have worn a man's suit. Poetry has been written about her legs. Her voice was orgasmic, her deftness with a cigarette magical, and, like all true icons, she always spoke of herself in the third person. What a gal. EW

Courtney Love

During the 1990s, "the most controversial woman in the history of rock" (© Rolling Stone) set the world on fire with her band Hole, married Kurt Cobain, and bagged herself a Golden Globe nomination for her role in The People Vs Larry Flynt. Now clean-living after a few years off the rails, she has a new album out this year. She wrote this for us. AG

"I love women who don't actually exist – Brigid, Cerridwen, Kali – goddesses with special powers. I love this book called The Book Of The Courtesans which is really about the women on this list. We're all modern-day courtesans in some way, whether or not we're feminists – outsiders to some degree. the most important thing to me is taking my own counsel, practising my Buddhism, staying off drugs (I happen to be very allergic to them), and taking care of my skin. I've done that since I was nine.

My inspirations since I was young were two visual images: Warhol's Marilyn, and Dylan's cover of Bringing It All Back Home. And when I grew up I wanted to somehow marry the image of Dylan to the image of Marilyn – Marilyn was a very, very angry person who hid it with kittenish sexuality, and Dylan was obviously an angry man, and still is. It's crucial to me to get rid of grudges – jealousy, contempt for others and all toxic karma like that, but to still somehow stay pissed off at the world.

Going to the nunnery (rehab) for 90 days recently was the best thing that ever happened to me – I wrote and wrote and came out with two albums' worth of songs, a cycle of sexual desperation and fear of ending up alone (how most courtesans ended up – they'd get thrown off their game and fall in love for the sake of love and get left broke, alone). There was so much in my soul during those 90 days. Saying goodbye to drugs – it's a mourning process, but I'm better able to take care of my body and soul now.

And I'm barely in my prime – I fully intend to have more children and end up in the country with horses and my dogs and my daughter(s) and sons. I'm just getting started and I'm honoured to be on this list. Women who fascinate me: Weimar Republic women such as Anita Berber, Texas Guinan and Mae West intrigue me, Ziegfeld girls and 1890s great beauties of the stage who'd just stand there on tableaux. My favourite present-day celebrity is Drew Barrymore – she's a dear friend and like family to me, but I love how she pulled herself up by her bootstraps and recreated herself without faking a thing. I hate faking anything, and I hate lying, there's no need for it. My MO is the following: "Good manners cost NOTHING." I find that people who are the most intriguing and have the most staying power have the best manners and the best senses of humour. Living in Hollywood is like being a diplomat or a politician – you must always have your manners at their best. Now I'm no longer out to sea with drugs I've no excuse to be rude or think I'm better than anyone else."

Tura Satana kicks arse. Literally. Russ Meyer's original Ultra Vixen in 1965's Faster Pussycat, Kill! Kill!, she's harder than nails, and not afraid to overdo it on the eyeliner. Plus, at 68, she's probably the oldest lady on Myspace. Tura says she's "extremely honoured" to be voted into the Bizarre Ultra Vixen poll, and told us: "My icons were Katharine Hepburn, Audrey Hepburn, Rosalind Russell, Joan Crawford, and Jane Russell. These women represented the strong women of my youth." EW

YOU SAID: "If it weren't for Tura and Bettie, the rest wouldn't exist! TURA all the way!" – Don Sirs Slave

Gail from Sin City

Gail is the toughest girl in Frank Miller's tough comicbook world of Basin 'Sin' City. Wearing not much more than a couple of strategically slung belts, Gail both leads and mothers her gang of gun-slinging prostitutes. Played in Robert Rodriguez's film adaptation by Rosario Dawson, Gail's more than a tart with a heart; she's the kind of woman you'd trade a human head for. KH

Tank Girl

I've spent most of my life searching for Tank Girl. Alas, the real-life incarnations have been disappointing (witness Lori Petty in the worst film ever made). For the oblivious among you, Tank Girl was what artist Jamie Hewlett did in the late 80s/early 90s (with writer Alan Martin), before he went off to get rich creating cartoon bands with Damon Albarn.

She first appeared in Deadline magazine, and spent her time living in a tank, fucking a mutant kangaroo, doing lots of drugs, shooting people, swearing, robbing banks, and sporting pioneering punk haircuts. None of it made much sense, and it was the coolest comic strip in the world. I did my first magazine-writing as part of work experience for Deadline, where I was privy to sketches Hewlett used to send in that were rejected, such as a piece of cover art featuring Tank Girl circumcising herself. Now there's an Ultra Vixen for you.

I still haven't found my real-life Tank Girl, but I'll keep on searching. If you're Tank Girl, please email me here at Bizarre, I need you. AG

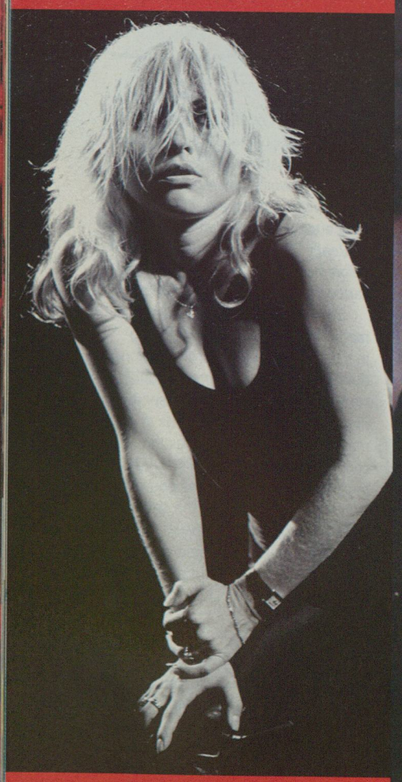
Debbie Harry



GETTY IMAGES

Blondie's lead singer was a scorching sex symbol, but the kind that girls worshipped too. She had perfect feline looks, a brittle, vulnerable voice, but was endearingly geeky and tomboyish at the same time. She grinned goofily while wearing her knickers and little T-shirts, and pioneered two-tone hair colouring because she "couldn't be bothered" to do the back. Punk rock. KH

Christina Ricci

LANDMARK MEDIA

Taking on weird roles playing unconventional characters in indie films and Hollywood blockbusters alike – The Addams Family, The Ice Storm, Buffalo 66, Monster, Sleepy Hollow – Ricci has never been afraid of the darker side of life. Expect a sensational comeback this May, when she stars as smalltown tramp Rae (pictured) opposite Samuel L Jackson in romantic drama Black Snake Moan. JD

Catwoman

The ultimate feline fatale was brought to life with explosive sex appeal by Michelle Pfeiffer in Tim Burton's 1992 film Batman Returns. While some comicbook purists might not have liked Burton's rubbered-up, ruby-lipped, whip-cracking alleycat, the rest of us were left purring over a crime-fighting sex kitten that bore no resemblance whatsoever to Eartha Kitt and Julie Newmar's campy 1960s moggies. In fact, Pfeiffer's Catwoman was so popular that several US cities had police add bus stops to their patrols in order to prevent the rampant poster theft that was taking place in the build-up to the film's release. GH

Asia Argento

CELEBRITYPICTURES.CO.UK

Asia Argento is the ultimate maverick. The two-time Bizarre coverstar is an extremely volatile mix of controversy, danger and sex, and does everything on her own terms. Which is why, aside from briefly flirting with Hollywood in XXX and Land Of The Dead, she's spent her acting/directing career spitting in the face of convention and pushing the emotional and physical envelope to the max. Viewing this bad girl in action is like watching open-heart surgery – nerve-wracking and intense. BC

Bianca Beauchamp

She's been on our cover more times than anyone else, she's cheeky, sexy, genuinely immersed in the world of fetish, and looks more luscious in Latex than anyone else in the world. Oh, Bianca… talk to us. KH

How does it feel to be voted onto the list?
"Truly a huge honour! I'm very flattered and moved. Bizarre is honestly my favourite magazine to read and being part of it always makes me proud."
Who are your all-time female icons?
"Both Marilyn and Dalida have a special place in my heart; they were fantastic, beautiful artists. Also, I'm totally stunned by Julie Strain; she's my favourite model of all time. I feel great respect for Dita; she's a true lady. And one last choice, does the Wicked Witch of the West count? She may not be real, but she's the most insane, evil bitch I ever fell in love with. Mwah!"
YOU SAID: "I love her wit and style and her wonderful face" – *Discordia
"She combines the flirty, naughty allure of Bettie Page with the modern-day carefree attitude towards fetishism and sexuality in general. Her playful disposition and passion for her work is always present and she sports one hell of a smoking body" – Carchoradonna

Angelina Jolie

What's not to like? She carried a vial filled with Billy Bob Thornton's blood on a chain around her neck, was open about her knife collection and self-harming, flirted with her brother, got married in black leather trousers and a white shirt that had the groom's name on the back painted in her blood. And she has great tattoos: 'Strength of will' in Arabic, 'A prayer for the wild at heart, kept in cages' and 'Quod me nutrit me destruit' ('What nourishes me also destroys me') among others. But more than that, she clearly doesn't lose any time worrying what other people think about her. Although she now gets stick for being like a Benetton billboard come to life, she's said in the past that whatever happens she's still "at heart just a punk kid with tattoos", and that's who we love. See her burn up the screen again soon in the Sin City sequels. JD

Bettie Page

Said to have been photographed more than Cindy Crawford and Marilyn Monroe combined, the pioneering Bettie Page is the undisputed queen of fetish. Her fringe alone has inspired more orgasms than Bizarre's had hot ding-dongs. EW

CMG WORLDWIDE, BETTIEPAGE.COM

Dita Von Teese

Burlesque queen, (ex) rock'n'roll wife, and style-setter, Dita looks like she should have dazzled in the 1940s before dying a penniless recluse in the early 80s. But no. She's young, she's lithe, and she can do things with a giant olive that you wouldn't tell your mother. EW

How does it feel to win the Bizarre poll, ahead of such women as Bettie Page, Marlene Dietrich, Angelina Jolie, and Cleopatra?

"I am very flattered and I don't even feel worthy to be included on that list! Personally, I'd have voted for the divine Marlene. She's truly an icon of unique beauty, eroticism, and style."

Who are your female icons?

"Besides Dietrich, I admire the eccentric art muse Marchesa Casati, 1940s movie stars Betty Grable, Mae West and Hedy Lamarr, famous mid-century fashion model Lisa Fonssagrives, and women like Diana Vreeland, who understood eccentricity and found beauty in things that are unusual."

Who was the biggest inspiration for your career?

"Gypsy Rose Lee and Bettie Page were originally whose footsteps I wanted to follow in, career-wise. The women had very different careers, but they were both influential at different times in my life. In the beginning, I wanted to bring back the spirit of nostalgic fetishism and show people that it could be something playful and classic rather than severe and frightening. And I'm a major admirer of the way Gypsy was unapologetic for being a stripper and for building her career on being a great showgirl rather than trying to fit in by being a serious actress or changing herself to fit into the mainstream... she was a major mainstream star, and she did it by doing what she did best, regardless of the stigma that was attached to burlesque and striptease."

Have you got a message for the readers of Bizarre?

"Thank you for all the support you've given me all these years, and continue to find the beauty in things that others might find bizarre!"

YOU SAID: "Dita Von Teese is Queen" – I Can Resist...

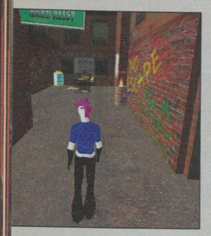
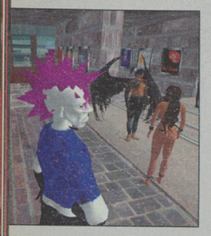
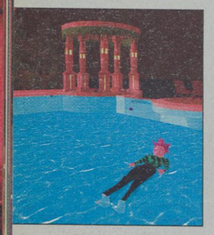
PLACES TO GO
GO HERE FOR A WHIRLWIND INTRODUCTION



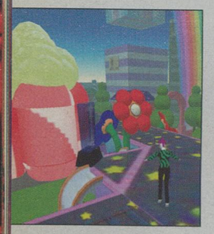
Hard Alley
Hard Alley is a forced-roleplay area. You turn up, agree to take part, and keep your fingers crossed. You can't have total subservience to another avatar in SL – much to the annoyance of hardcore subs who want this clause removed – but this is as close as you're going to come.



Amsterdam
An exact replica of its real-life namesake. Leaving Centraal Station, you'll find a faithful recreation of sex shops, canals, coffeehouses and everything else. Unlike real Amsterdam, you can buy cocaine and dried mushrooms in the shops. Don't bother, though – they're rubbish.



Haz Pazaar Gay Turkish Baths
There's no more beautifully ornate place in SL to hang out with gay, naked men. By day, it's a thriving meeting place and somewhere to ogle outsized genitals and rippling pecs. But at night, it's like a peaceful, post-apocalyptic spa.



Nakama
This SL district is divided into four separate sections, each created to look like a different anime style. You can choose to visit the 'slice of life anime', 'future dystopian anime', 'cutesy anime' or 'feudal Japan anime' areas. Each one is beautifully weird.

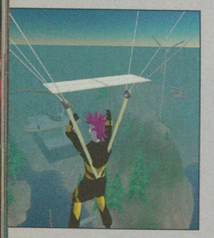
NorthStar
The NorthStar region of SL is home to, among other things, giant furry animals. Sitting on a trailer on the back of a truck, dipping their toes in the sea, it's like Gulliver's Travels but with huge 70ft-tall foxes wearing shades. Very weird indeed.



Abbotts Aerodrome
If you've ever wanted to throw yourself out of a plane but have been put off by the potential for injury, how about a trip to Abbotts? Simply buy the gear, plug in the height you want to jump from, and float back to earth admiring the scenery.

THE PIONEER PERVERT
"I INVENTED YOUR NEW PENIS"

If you drift into the seedier areas of SL you won't fail to notice that a character called Stroker Serpentine has created a significant proportion of the purchasable content. Not only did he create SL's first sex-related poseball (an object that animates your avatar when they come into contact with it – pick it up, and they'll pull appropriate shapes for whatever activity it promises), but he also claims to have made its first sex bed. In SL terms, he's like Bill Gates, Larry Flynt and God all rolled into one. He calls himself a "cyber-erotic pioneer/entrepreneur" and "Second Life's most predominant pervert". SL would be a much duller place without his considerable influence.

"I've always thumbed my nose at the arcane societal opinion that sex is 'dirty' or should be relegated to marriage," he tells us. "Sex was considered the ultimate form of interpersonal expression in our home. My mother gave me books, in the early 1970s, by Erica Jong and Xavier Hollander. Second Life is the ultimate erotic palette, where anyone can create anything that entices them. It gives me the freedom to express my own sexuality in a variety of media."

The long-term upshot has been that when Stroker washed up in Second Life he started to revolutionise its sex industry, creating custom-made 'toyz' intended to "enhance and inspire virtual eroticism". He's also created a virtual replica of Amsterdam city centre (see left). At the time of writing, Stroker is the top-rated seller on SIboutique.com.

"When I arrived in Second Life in November 2003 I noticed the vast majority of penises looked as if they'd been carved out of wood, using a chainsaw," he explains. "So I set out to design something I'd consider 'lifelike', and I was able to add functions such as text that responded to touch, multiple erection states, and pre-recorded sound files of male orgasms." Some of Stroker's penises allow you to animate a chosen partner so they perform oral sex on you. But the ultimate penis, the BV-3D, operates beds and sex toys, and comes (no pun intended) with a photorealistic texture. All yours for "about US$7".

But not everyone wants a penis for sex. Some people want one that performs the more mundane features of day-to-day life. And for them, Stroker developed a range that incorporates the "ability to urinate using particle streams".

Stroker reckons that, in total, he's sold "hundreds of thousands" of penises for an average of about $3 each. As Americans are annoyingly wont to say: You do the math.

STROKER HAS SOLD HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS OF PENISES TO SL USERS, AT $3 EACH... YOU DO THE MATH

THE SEX GEEK
REACH OUT AND TOUCH SOMEONE...

One accusation levelled at SL sex is that it's nothing more than old-fashioned cybersex with some clunky graphics playing out on the screen in front of you. And without Kyle Machulis (aka qDot Bunnyhug in SL) it probably would be.

Before appearing in SL, Kyle was known for his site Slashdong.com, which he describes as "the premier resource for sex tech engineering" and a mine of info on 'teledildonics' (the science of remote-controlled sex toys, to you and me). He gives talks at conferences about sex in games and human interaction in gaming.

Possibly Kyle's finest achievement was writing a program that allows people to control sex toys through SL. When an avatar touches another avatar in a certain way, a real-life vibrator on the second person's machine buzzes in special and unpredictable ways. It's as close as anyone has come to creating a penis that can come out of a screen and pleasure someone.

Having made a vibrator that can be run from a USB port, he then made it possible for someone else in SL to control it. "You can attach speeds to things," Kyle tells us. "The more you touch something, the faster it'll go, or a different pattern will be sent to the vibrator."

Kyle's now working for Linden, the company that runs SL, on projects exploring interaction between SL and the real world. He didn't make a single penny from his sex invention because he distributed his code for free. Unsurprisingly, he still gets fanmail.

SCHIZOPHRENIA SIMULATOR
EXPERIENCING MENTAL ILLNESS

SL-as-educational-tool stories normally focus on the fact that something in the region of 50 US universities have some kind of presence 'in world' and give the odd lecture there.

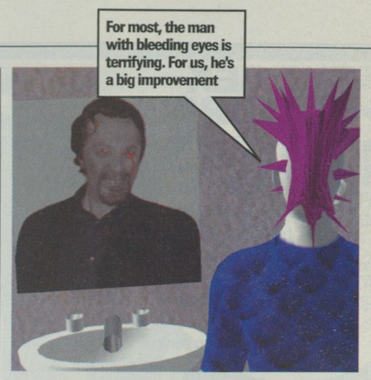
Whether that actually helps anyone or is just a gimmick is regularly debated. But you can't argue with the work of Professor Peter Yellowlees. Having worked as an academic psychiatrist for a number of years, and having tried to replicate the experience of schizophrenia in many ways during that time, he's created a facility on 2,560m^2 of the Sedig region of SL to allow non-schizophrenics to experience what schizophrenia is like.

"As you probably realise," he tells us, "one of the symptoms people with schizophrenia have is hallucinations; they hear voices and see visions. There are things they hear and see that the average person doesn't. And it's very hard to teach students exactly what that experience is like. Unless you happen to take a lot of drugs or have other things that cause hallucinations, most people don't actually experience them. And while you can certainly watch movies and get an idea of what it's like from there, it's different from being inside an environment where there are things going on about you that are weird."

The building that houses the schizophrenia simulator is an exact replica of the Sacramento facility inpatients' psychiatric unit. "That's the one we use for teaching," Prof Yellowlees says. "So the students we're teaching literally go into a replica of the facility they go into in real life."

"The hallucinations are all simulations based on actual cases I've seen, in as much as that makes sense," continues Prof Yellowlees. "They're simulations of hallucinations of patients I've personally seen and treated."

The aural ones include short speech files urging you to kill yourself, taunting you that you don't even exist, that the world isn't real, that someone can read your thoughts and steal your mind. "Death is the answer! Kill yourself now!" shouts a voice out of nowhere. Loud bagpipe music also comes and goes.



The visual hallucinations include the floor disappearing beneath you, a poster that changes its words to insult you, and a mirror where your face bleeds from the eyes and dies when you look into it. In the final room, a gun suddenly appears on a table lit by a cone of light and voices shout at you to pick it up and kill yourself.

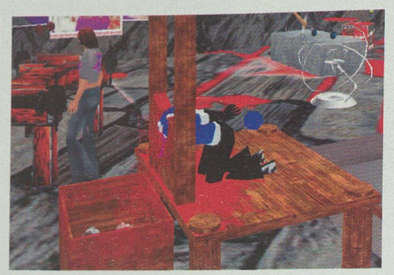
"Some people do find it disturbing and we have a little notice at the front saying to be careful," says Prof Yellowlees. "People have said it's very much like what they experienced or a friend experienced. Some people have got upset as they've just realised what's happening with their relatives. But the main feedback we have, and I get a lot of feedback from SL residents, is very positive."

WEIRD VOICES URGE YOU TO KILL YOURSELF... WALL POSTERS CHANGE WORDS TO INSULT YOU... MIRRORS BLEED

THE SEX PLAYGROUND

PERVY PALACE OF PLEASURE AND PAIN

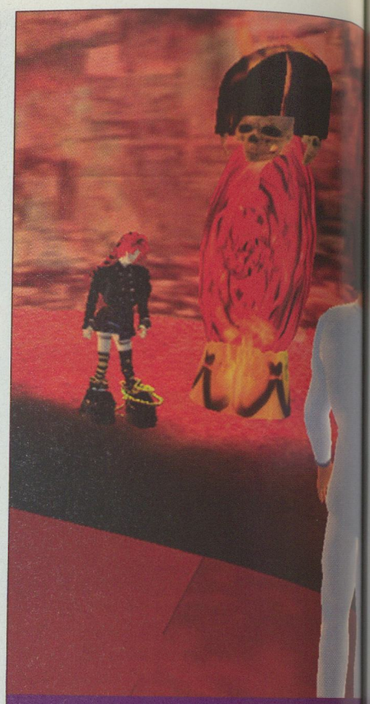
The Darkness is a 'sex playground' with a difference. As you'd expect, there are plenty of naked people showing off their new forearm-sized penises, but The Darkness' real 'charm' comes from the torture room, where blood oozes from the floor and ceiling and every masochistic whim is catered for. You can choose to be suspended over lit candles, put on an old-fashioned rack, or eased down on a sharp conical object that I don't know the name of but, is probably known as something like 'the rectal destructor'.



I DON'T KNOW THE DEVICE'S NAME, BUT I'LL BET IT'S CALLED SOMETHING LIKE 'THE RECTAL DESTRUCTOR'

And if you want to cross the line between pain and execution, then you'll be pleased to know that available methods for ending it all include: 1) Hanging from the three-noose gallows; 2) Tying yourself to a table that then drives three-dozen spikes through your body; 3) Being burnt at the stake, like Joan of Arc, or fast-forwarding 400 years of French executions and 4) Playing Marie Antoinette by having your head slashed off with a guillotine and dumped in a basket, sprayed by blood gushing out of your neck. You can observe all these from the victim's point of view; or from a spectator's; or, if you'd rather, as a victim observing the events as an out-of-body experience.

The Darkness also caters for piss and shit fetishists. Roam through the various rooms long enough and you'll stumble into what looks like a lavatory, and is, in a sense, but with the added feature that it allows you to manoeuvre yourself into a position where your face is the bowl. Images of a woman shitting adorn the walls, if you want to double check you're in the correct place before doing anything you might regret.



HIROSHIMA GARDEN

MACABRE MEMORIAL TO THE MASSACRED

Political statements are as popular in SL as they are in real-life. Stop The War, Legalise Marijuana, End World Poverty – they're all the pet peeve of someone and their avatar. Memorials are common, too. There's a 9/11 memorial; one to honour the men who fell during operation Enduring Freedom; and within hours of the 7/7 bombings in London people were gathering around imaginary tea-lights and flowers to pay their respects. But by some distance the most amazing memorial is Hiroshima Garden, developed by Snakekiss Noir to commemorate the 60th anniversary of the bombing of Hiroshima.

Ms Noir designed a landscape to replicate the moment immediately after the bomb dropped, to coincide with SL's Burning Life festival, an 'in world' version of the Burning Man festival. Her memorial has 10ft-tall skulls, burning buildings, thick black smoke, smouldering remains, and, when you get to the centre, a huge hole created by the bomb. The dead are represented by life-sized dolls with their faces obscured, who scream out in pain when you touch them. Ghosts walk among the rubble. All of it to remind you there were people under the mushroom cloud that's become the enduring image of the event. Its likeness to hell wasn't lost on visitors.

"When I made this, I wanted to make sure it didn't look exploitative, shallow or lacking in depth," Ms Noir told the official Linden SL blog. "It had to have… how would you say, 'soul'."

Have you found it yet? No? Are you sure? Well, make sure you keep looking. Hard!

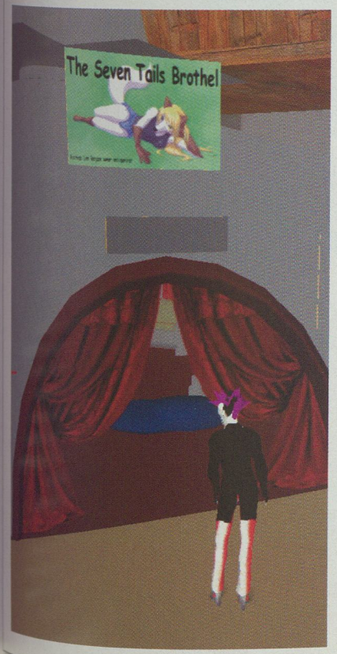
WE'LL BE IN SECOND LIFE AT 4PM GMT ON FRIDAY 9 MARCH. INSTANT MESSAGE 'BIZ VANBEECK' (THAT'S US) AND WE'LL TELEPORT YOU OVER TO WHERE WE ARE. COME ALONG AND SAY HELLO.



THE GROUP OF PERVERTS

DEVIANCE WITH A FLUFFY TAIL

Furries have a significant presence in SL. You can easily transform your avatar into a foxy animal, and there are even furry brothels. The Seven Tails Brothel is owned by Dani Bergson, "a white fox/wolf, hermaphrodite in gender" who's "shapely, big-breasted, with long legs and a large poofy tail". Last year, Seven Tails absorbed a rival furry brothel, the Soft Paw Agency, and together they now get about 60 customers a month, who pay between Linden$500 and L$700 (L$250 = US$1) per visit.

You can do pretty much anything you want with the furry ho of your choice and, as you'd expect, Dani's had some odd requests. "As an escort in SL you end up with folks wanting to fulfil some pretty weird fantasies," she says. "I'm often hired for impregnation. Folks seem to love the idea of a sexy girl like me being filled with their kids. Others seem to find me motherly enough to hire me in a matriarch role."

Unbirthing is also a popular furry sub-fetish. "It's when you take another person inside you," explains Dani. "Usually they go headfirst, pressing their face into your puss, beginning by licking you, getting you wet. They press fingers inside, and your cunt stretches, able to take fingers, then both hands."

'UNBIRTHING' IS A POPULAR FETISH – "IT'S WHEN YOU TAKE A PERSON INSIDE YOU," EXPLAINS ONE FURRY FAN

The arms follow. "At this point their fingers are working into your cervix, and most of the time they're working their face into your puss as it gapes wider and wider under the pressure. Their head pops in with a rush, and the belly can now show the shape of it. Usually muscle contractions at this point start drawing them inside."

Then the hips open so the shoulders can pass. Eventually the person is inside you. "Your belly forms a dome, the shape of your passenger now clear in your tight skin," says Dani. "Then all that's left is your panting and feeling them wriggling where only you can get them. At this point there's much you can do, starting any number of changes in their form, or make them an infant again."

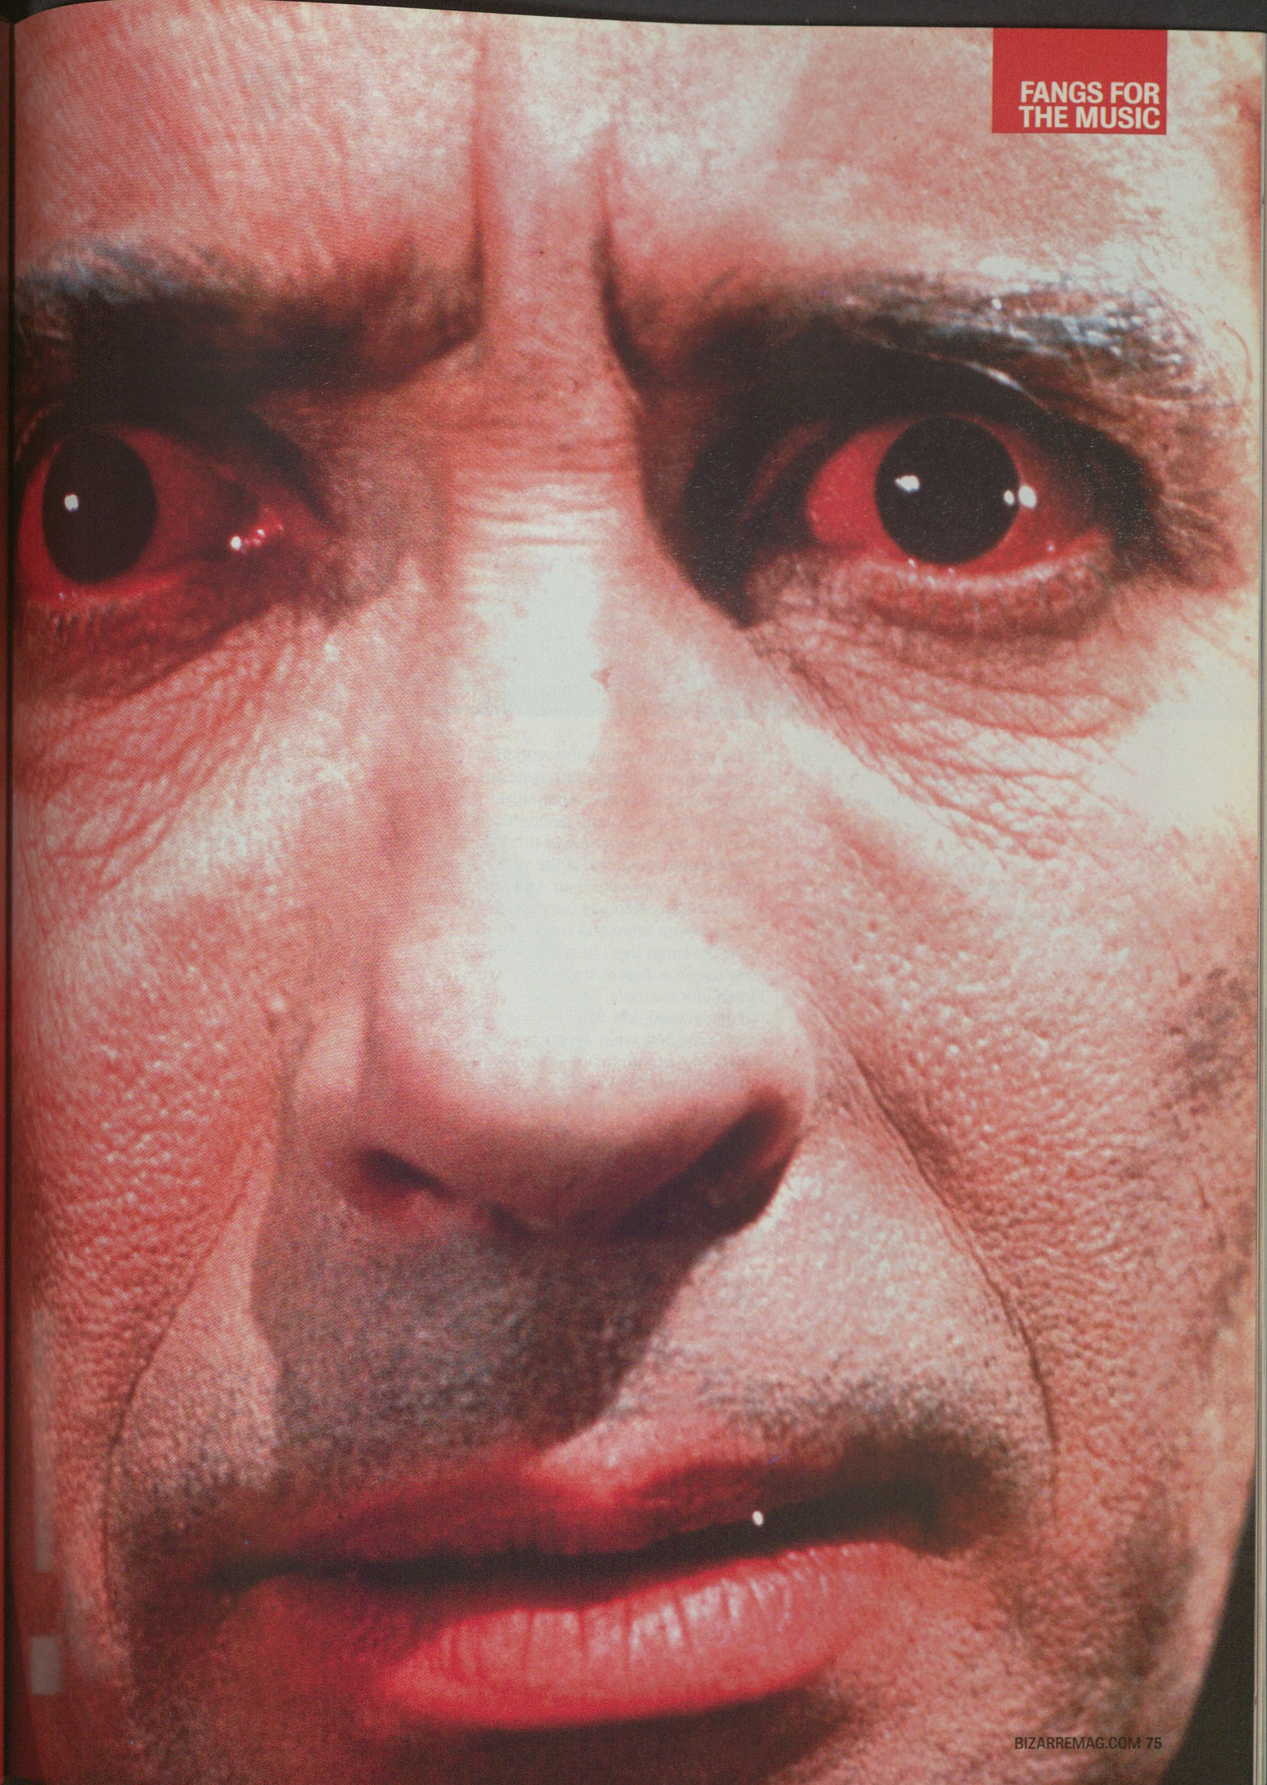
FANGS FOR THE MUSIC



Lee as Dracula

Christopher Lee has just released his debut album, Revelation, and is sitting in front of Bizarre – during his one-day promotional appearance at the movie and comic showcase, London MCM Expo – and wants to talk about it. We'd like to ask him what he thinks about the new Wicker Man, and if he has any regrets over starring in Howling 2: Your Sister Is A Werewolf – but his manager keeps glaring at us and saying, "Only ask him about the album, OK?" However, there's still plenty to discuss here – Lee's Revelation album features the screen icon giving it his all to the likes of 'My Way' and 'Silent Night', and there's even some heavy-metal – yes, heavy-metal – in there. The Killers need not worry about losing their audience any time soon but, because he's the same freaking legend that took his evil rule to Middle-earth in The Lord Of The Rings and burned Edward Woodward alive in The Wicker Man, we're happy to discuss practically anything he turns his talents to. So, Mr Lee, here's your chance to defend your album…

You cover 'My Way' on the album – how did it feel to tackle Frank Sinatra?
I don't sing it like him.
But surely doing a cover version of a song that well known, and which has Sinatra's stamp all over it, didn't come completely from your own mojo?
Absolutely it did! The most important thing for me with this album is that I – as an actor who happens to be able to sing – have tried to present a series of characters hitting the right notes and singing the right words in tempo and in rhythm. In other words, I'm singing the songs correctly, but with my interpretation of each one as an actor. You see, with all the great singers – and Sinatra was one of them – they did things their way, but when you listen to my interpretation you'll see that I really did do it my way. I actually mean it when I'm singing it! This is the reason I did this album – it gave me the chance, before it was too late, to show the world I can do something I've talked about from time to time, but which never really materialised. I had to choose all the songs and decide which ones I wanted to do. Every one of these songs is different and every one of the voices I use is different – I even sing in an American accent for one song. This is totally opposed to a singer who just stands up there and sings. I'm trying to make the songs live – just like someone who's standing on a theatre stage. 'The Toreador March', for example, I sing like a Spanish bullfighter, and 'My Way' I just sing with the words, which is what a really good opera singer would do – but there are not many opera singers who happen to be very good actors.
You said you sing in the character of a bullfighter – strangely apt because haven't you had more screen swordfights than anyone else in cinema history?
Yes, and I actually can swordfight – I'm not a faker; in fact, my father was an army champion… but did you know a stuntman looked at every swordfight, and lightsaber fight, I have ever had? He was amazed when he found out Basil Rathbone and Errol Flynn had done around about nine swordfights, but I'd done 17! That's a world record. I've had the most fights out of anybody and have the scars to prove it.

"I SING IN AN AMERICAN ACCENT; THEN LIKE A SPANISH BULLFIGHTER; THEN IN A HEAVY-METAL STYLE. I HAVE A SERIES OF CHARACTERS"

As Count Dooku in Attack Of The Clones

And as Willy Wonka's dad in Charlie And The Chocolate Factory

You have a very distinctive voice, which is bound to bring people to the album – even out of curiosity.
Yes, but having a good speaking voice doesn't mean you can sing. I'm just blessed.
Right, so why has it taken you so long to record an album? Not many people make their debut at 84.
Well, I was on a German album once, but you wouldn't know it because it was all in German and based around Edgar Allan Poe. I sang a song called 'Eleanor', based on one of his characters. I was also on an album recorded out in LA in 1998, which was sung in five languages. People say I'm fluent in eight languages, but that rumour comes from the same source that says I've played Dracula 11 times, which is wrong. Anyway, this is a unique recording because no other man of my age has sung on an album… [Lee's manager shouts out, "Tony Bennett".] Yes, but has he sung these sorts of songs? [Lee's manager says, "Not these kinds of songs necessarily."] Oh, Tony Bennett – he's marvellous, but then he's a fully trained singer and I'm not.
You're obviously best known for your work in the horror and sci-fi genre…
No! You're absolutely wrong, and I won't accept that. I'm not best known for that. I was until 1970, but then things changed and the proof is up on the screen. If you don't believe your own eyes, I can't say anything else... why did you say that?
Well, here I'm looking at you and I'm thinking of Dracula and The Wicker Man…
OK, The Wicker Man, yes – but what about The Lord Of The Rings and Star Wars?
Well, I said sci-fi as well…
Yes, but 'horror' is a word I dislike immensely, as did Boris Karloff. We prefer 'fantasy'. We made fairy stories, imaginary things…
OK, but do you see your, let's say, fantasy-film fanbase buying this CD? I mean, you're Dracula, Lord Summerisle, Saruman, and here you are singing 'My Way'…
Yes, but I believe all generations will enjoy it – and that's because some of these songs are pretty familiar. Anyone who knows Oklahoma will know 'Oh! What a Beautiful Morning'... The whole world knows the famous 'Toreador March' – even people who've never been to an opera know it, and we've done two versions, one with a heavy-metal background and the other with a flamenco background. There's a big mixture of songs. Yes, people have one-track minds – the people who make movies, the casting directors… That's why it's taken me so long to do this.
Will you sing on the Jonathan Ross show?
Yeah, I could do that but, I'd have to be careful about what I could sing. For example, I couldn't sing 'The Toreador March', which I do in French and with a heavy-metal background on the album. Now that's a killer song. There are too many syllables and short words and singing in French is hard, although I speak the language very well.
What music do you listen to personally?
At least 90 per cent of it is classical music – opera, symphony and concerto – that sort of thing. I do listen to pop music, but only of a certain kind. For instance, I listen to Il Divo – who I met in New York a few days ago – and I actually asked them if they'd like to sing something with me when I do my next album. They said they'd be very, very pleased to.
So you're doing a second LP?
Yeah, I'll do another album – and with a whole bunch of people, although I can't name them as it isn't concrete yet. I can tell you one is Rhapsody Of Fire, a heavy-metal group for whom I already did a song. Another heavy-metal band, Man O War, are also interested – I've done a song with them in the past, although I can't sing like them!
Take a side – Christopher Lee the singer or Christopher Lee the actor?
Well, there's no comparison. I always wanted to be an opera singer, and I was always told I should be, but 50 years ago that wasn't possible. It's all just vocal acting – music and language are very similar, you either can or you can't, and I've been blessed because I can. I sing every day.

- He's never been nominated for an Academy Award. Shame on the Academy.
- Lee's rider requests a supply of Earl Grey tea.

- Lee and his wife used to live next door to another great horror actor, Boris Karloff.
- He's the step-cousin of James Bond novelist Ian Fleming. In 1962, Fleming suggested Lee would be perfect for the role of Dr No in the film of the same name, but the casting never happened. HUMAN ZOO

WORDS JAMES DOORNE

They ink their skin, sharpen their fangs, split their tongues and sew on fur. Meet the two-legged beasts

Over the years, countless people have tried to define the fine line that stands between animals and humans. And whatever edge humans can claim to have on the side of intelligence and complexity of societal organisation, we're missing that élan, the freedom, and the cool that makes animals so enthralling. Well, most of us are. But some people have gone further than admiring the animalistic grace of big cats, lizards and wolves, and had body mods to become more like them. If we had the budget for a Bizarre Zoo, you can bet your mortgage that the following people would be in it… ➡

ZEBRA MAN

'TATTOOED BY KIDNAPPERS!'

Irrefutable facts about Zebra Man (real name Horace Ridler) are scarce. One version of his life story tells of a well-bred bon viveur who distinguished himself academically while still young. An alternative version says he joined the army when he was young and became wealthy from the inheritance he received upon his father's death. Either way, by the age of 36 he'd gained some pretty basic tattoos that were sufficient to earn him a meagre living as a sideshow attraction.

Around 1930, he took the decision to make his act more bankable by having his whole body covered in thick, zebra-like tattoos. After 150 hours of work by legendary tattooist George Burchett, he was reborn as Zebra Man. His newly adopted shtick was that he'd regale his audience with tall tales about how he'd been kidnapped in New Guinea, and how his captors tortured him by tattooing him to look like a zebra. From this point on he signed autographs as 'Barbaric Beauty'.

ZEBRA MAN HAD BEEN 'KIDNAPPED' BY SAVAGES, WHO TATTOOED HIM AS A FORM OF CRUEL TORTURE

He spent six months appearing at Ripley's Odditorium, doing up to 10 shows a day, and featured as part of John Hix's Odditorium at the World's Fair in Queens, New York, in 1941. Before his death in 1969 he'd travelled most of the world, appearing at sideshows to pay his way.

CAT MAN

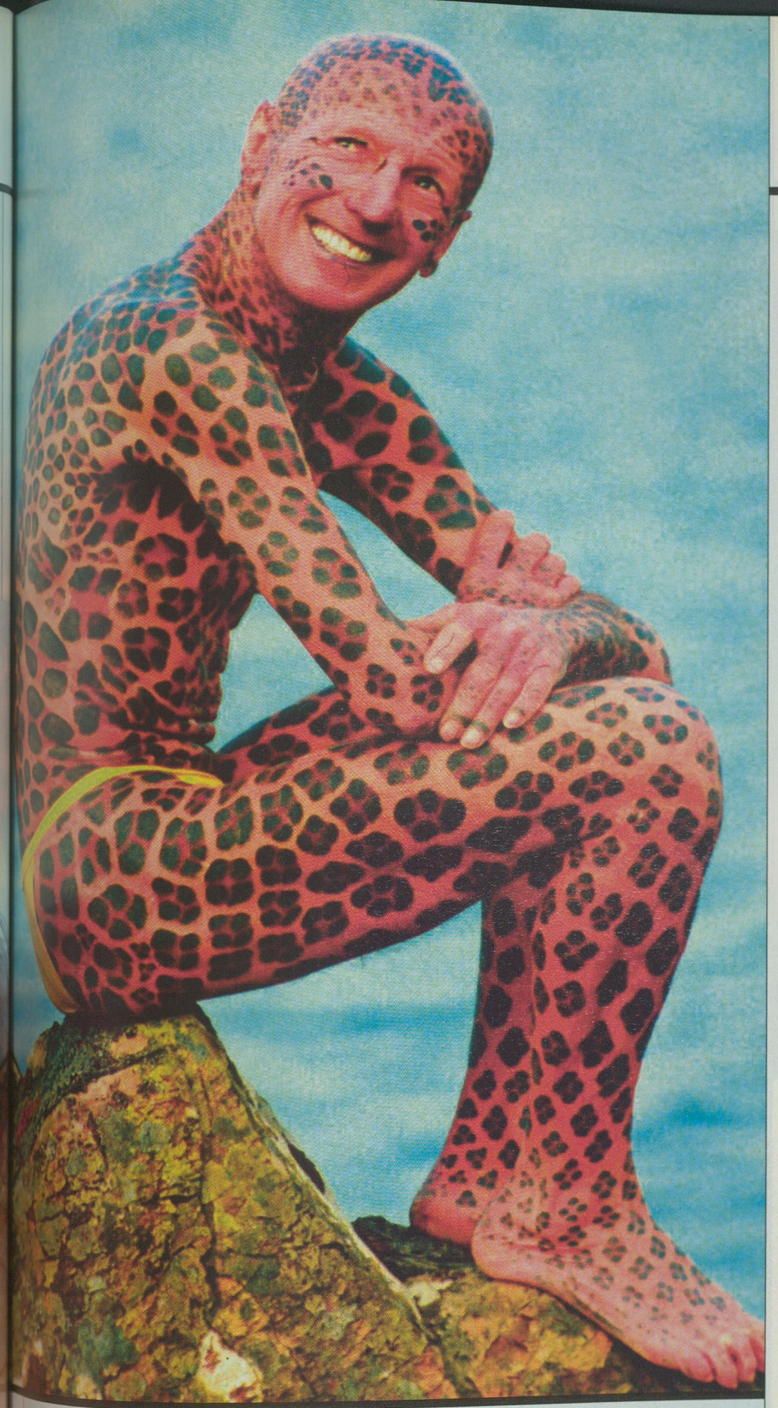
HE WANTS FUR SURGICALLY ATTACHED

Ex-Navy sonar technician Dennis Avner has had tattoos, dentistry work and whisker implants in his attempts to look more like a tiger. And although he's widely known as 'Cat Man', he prefers to be called by his Native American name, Stalking Cat, as his heritage is central to his transformation.

Avner's parents are of Huron and Lakota descent, and he sees transformation into one's own totem as an ancient Huron tradition. He began his transformation aged 23, after speaking to a chief who inspired him to 'follow the ways' of the tiger.

Since then, he's undergone full-body tattooing and had his hairline shifted. He's had facial implants to sport synthetic whiskers and to change the shape of his brow and forehead. He's had silicone injected into his face, and his teeth made more feline with filed caps. His ears have been surgically pointed, and his lip has been split to appear more like a tiger's. The look is completed by green contacts with a narrow iris like a cat's.

Stalking Cat hopes to one day have real fur surgically attached. If he achieves that, it'll have to be performed outside the US – none of his current modifications are classed as plastic surgery, and they've been carried out by a body-modification artist rather than a surgeon. It's illegal for a plastic surgeon to change someone's appearance beyond what society would consider normal.



LEOPARD MAN

HE WANTS TO BE ALONE (IN A RIVER)

Tom Leppard, aka The Leopard Man of Skye, is a hermit who lives in a primitive hut and bathes in a river on the small Scottish island. He began his reclusive life following a 28-year stint in the army. By the time it was over, he didn't want to return to conventional life but still wanted to be known for something.

"I spent too long in the forces – 28 years. I couldn't mix with ordinary people," he says. "I decided I wanted to be the biggest of something, the only one of something. It had to be a tattoo, one tattoo. This is one tattoo." The single all-body tattoo cost more than £5,000. Leopard Man also has a set of fangs, and was once the world's most tattooed man.

He now lives in the wild as much as possible, only venturing into town by canoe when he needs supplies or to pick up his pension. In a rare BBC television interview, he told a reporter: "As far as I'm concerned, if there's a paradise on Earth, I'm in it. You're welcome to what you've got. I'll keep this." ➡

ANIMAL MODS

IMPROVING ON MOTHER NATURE

Poor little creatures, animals – generally, they're stuck with the boring, plain old body they're born into. However, some owners have taken it upon themselves to customise their little critters…

Pierced Goldfish

Although this high-rolling chap may look like he's playing Travel Monopoly, he's actually the proud owner of a labret piercing. The justification for perforating fish without their permission, given by the Arizona body mod artist who performed this act, was that "goldfish have 30-second memories". So that's alright, then.

Wim Delvoye

The Belgian artist has been tattooing pigs for years, adorning them with designs associated with Russian prisoners and Louis Vuitton logos. He's banned from exhibiting in China, after offending Communist party officials by inking one porker with the face of Lenin.

Robert Altman

Long before he turned to films, the recently deceased director made a living tattooing ID codes onto dogs, including the canine of former president Harry S Truman. Said Altman in an interview: "We thought we'd be millionaires. It turned out that I just got a few dog bites."

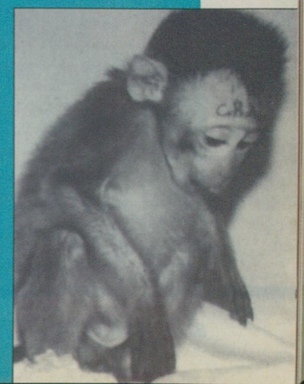
Victorian Dog Tattoos

The puppy fashion craze for 1899's high society was to have your personal monogram emblazoned across your pet dog's chest, and then paraded around local tea parties and drawing rooms.

Crap Monkey

The Royal College of Surgeons know a good prank. Drawing a moustache on your best friend while he sleeps is funny, but tattooing the word 'crap' onto a monkey's head while he rests is some next-level shit.

Dom Passantino



LIZARD MAN

HE'S SPENT $12,000 ON SURGERY

Erik Sprague, better known as Lizard Man, has undergone more than 650 hours of tattooing to achieve the appearance of reptile scales on his body in his quest to look more lizard-like. Most of it was done in six- to eight-hour sessions, although the longest one – the work on his ribs and abdomen – was 11 hours long. On his blog he describes his look as "a reptilian motif but obviously stylised a great deal".

Other work he's had done includes stretched earlobes and lots of body piercings, including his nipples, tongue, septum and penis. The ridged look over his eyes is created by subdermal implants. Four of his teeth have also been filed to points, and his tongue has been surgically split as well.

As for the cost, he covered that on his blog at Bmezine.com/news/lizardman-all.html.

"I guesstimate my total at $12,000 for tattooing, surgeries, implants and so on. But that total doesn't include things like travel costs and time incurred for procedures and healing. The monetary cost or alleged value of a mod is a very poor rating scale. It isn't about money."

But Lizard Man is more than tattoos: he also performs something he describes as "a one man comedy-magic-sideshow". So you can see him sword-swallow, bang a nail into his nose, eat fire, breathe fire, and eat insects for your pleasure.

WOLVERINE MAN

HE WIPES WITH HIS LEFT HAND

A Brazilian user known as Freak Boy showed off this temporary metal-claw body mod on Bmezine.com late last year, and it polarised opinion among other users on the board. Some were blown away by its similarity to Freddy Krueger and Wolverine from X-Men, but others were unimpressed. We like it.

KATZEN

WANTED TO BE A TIGER FOREVER

Ever since she was five, Katzen has dreamt of being a tiger. "As a kid I used to see myself in dreams with tiger stripes and it seemed like a really cool way to express myself," she tells us. "I'd paint stripes on myself. That was my way of doing it when I was a kid. I got my expression out that way, but I could still wait until I was 18 to make the decision."

When she did turn 18 she got her first tattoo, and since then 227 different artists have worked on her, for a total of 700 hours – all for free. "I've never actually paid for a tattoo," she admits. "They like the project and they do it to see that it happens."

She's even done some of the work herself. "I tattooed from my knee to my ankle on my right leg, and a lot of the knee-to-ankle area on my left," she says, but admits it's "a lot easier to lay back and let someone else do it".

The 'project' that's close to completion is her ambition to become the first female in history with a single-theme all-over body tattoo. It's not done yet – "I'm very nearly completed. My right arm's the only thing that I need to get shaded in. I've already picked the artist, I just have to wait," she says – but it'll probably be finished off some time this summer. She's just laying off the tattoos while she's pregnant.

Katzen is currently working at Telepathic Tattoo, 502 Onion Street, Austin, Texas. If you're in the area, go and see her and get inked.

(NO) WINGS MAN

HE'S A FLIGHTLESS ANGEL

This skin removal was done at Angel Tattoo in Moscow on Bmezine.com member Defstar. It was done over six sessions that included skin removal, chemical burning, cutting and branding. The three scars are intended to make it look like Defstar had wings that were removed.

WILDENSTEIN!

THE WOMAN WHO BECAME A CAT

In her younger days, Jocelyn Wildenstein was one of the most desired debutantes in Europe, a beauty whose twin loves of deerhunting and piloting aircraft made her a perfect catch for any dashing member of high society. Men like Alec Wildenstein, heir to a $10billion fortune.

A Las Vegas marriage soon followed, along with Wildenstein's gifts for his bride: two homes in France; one in Switzerland; a beach estate in the Carribbean; five pure-bred greyhounds; and $10million in jewels. It wasn't enough to keep him interested in her, though, and this, combined with an onset of his depression, caused him to spend most of his time in Africa, observing the lions in his private jungle. So Jocelyn took the only logical solution to revive her husband's interest: visit a surgeon with the express intent of looking like a big cat.

Her felinification didn't work. Apparently, Alec's first reaction was to scream; he later remarked that, "She seems to think you fix a face the way you fix a house." She finally won a divorce settlement in the tens of millions, and used the funds to turn herself fully into the talkshow opening-monologue gag you all know and love today. Dom Passantino

THIS IS NERDCORE

Geeks are getting sexy, and we're not talking about slapping a pair of glasses on a pornstar. This lot dig Star Trek, obsess about comicbooks, and definitely know their Linux from their LAN. Meet the girls at the front of the class...

WORDS DOM PASSANTINO

There's no polite way to put this: Nerds are fucking. Fifteen years ago they were happy just to stand around and put up with the occasional wisecrack aimed in their direction. Now they're fucking over the internet, spending more money on fetish apparel than Warhammer 40k figure paint, and displaying a sexuality that appears to suggest they've been exposed to material slightly more risqué than the average Dilbert strip.

Leading the battle lines in the nerd-porn revolution is Anna Logue, a psychology student currently studying for a double major, who lists among her hobbies "Dungeons & Dragons", "Magic: The Gathering", and "giving head. I love to take complete control of your pleasure". Anna's personal website, Nerdpr0n.com (maintained, scripted and written entirely by her, of course), eschews the standard porn props of oversized dildos, wicker chairs by rented swimming pools, and the undeniable aura of pathetic desperation. Instead, you can log on to see her performing fellatio on her boyfriend while dressed in a Star Trek officer's uniform, and getting very excited and exposing herself as she leafs through an Alan Moore comicbook. Or, in what may be her finest hour, fingering herself while wearing a Nintendo Entertainment System Powerglove.

The girl knows her audience as well. "The average fratboy isn't going to be interested in a site where the focus is on my Starfleet uniform and not my genitalia," she says in a conversation taking place, true to nerd form, over ICQ. "I get more questions asking what distribution of Linux I'm using than how many dicks I've sucked. My users want to be entertained, amused, stimulated, and then have a quick wank."

The rise of female nerds

It's not just in her photos and fanbase that Anna stands out from your common-or-garden pornstress, though. Most amateur sites these days have a personal blog section where the model, as Anna notes, "tends to document her sex life. I'd rather talk about vampires or what books I've been reading." Indeed, in my many years of porn appreciation, I've never seen a starlet casually mention that, "I've used Redhat (back when it wasn't an enterprise edition), FreeBSD, Mandrake, Mandriva, Xandros, Ubuntu and a whole fuckload of live Linux CDs. I do dual boot with XP, though, because while GIMP is totally sweet, it has yet to catch up with Adobe PS CS2."

Anna claims to be fighting a battle against the stereotype that "nerds are a subculture that's unattractive, full of basement-dwellers who only leave their computers and comicbooks for a weekly shower", but doesn't consider herself a pornstar. "I don't go to porn conventions, I don't have sex with strangers, and there's barely any hardcore on my site," she says. "I do girl/girl stuff and blowjobs as it's fun for me and my members. It's technically porn, since there's lots of nakedness, but it's... fun. It tears down a lot of porn paradigms and stereotypes."

And it's true, very few other adult entertainers would be photographed writhing over a pile of 20-sided dice, tied up in bondage with loose computing cables, or roleplaying a librarian that gets turned on and humps a small statue of Cthulhu. "Female nerdity is on the rise," she adds. "It's harder for women to be nerds because, in addition to swimming against the normality stream, they also grow up with beauty standards that men are intimidated by smart women, boys don't make passes at girls who wear glasses, blondes have more fun... you find fewer female nerds. That's changing, though."

And with more female nerds coming through the ranks, there are more female nerds willing to take their clothes off and show the results online. Nakkidnerds.com is another website helping to put the 'IT' back into 'titwank'. Set up six years ago by Cloei Carson, the site features an all-nerd-model line-up, and may be the only pornographic website where the performers quite happily walk around wearing toe-socks. "We have initiation ➡ tests," boasts Carson proudly. "Star Trek fanatics who collect Dexter's Laboratory dolls are just the kind of girls we want on here."

Carson set the site up after finding herself "sick of so-called 'smart girls' in porn being normal pornstars with empty glasses frames on. I want people to start viewing the quiet girl at the back of the class as sexy. The brain is the largest sexual organ, and people need to be reminded of that. I hate that just because I'm smart, people think I can't do porn, and vice versa." A roster of models with such a good academic education can cause problems, however. Cloei admits they've had to take down sets of photographs because the naked women involved have gone on to qualify as high-school teachers.

The idea of naked nerds, gorgeous geeks and bootylicious brainiacs has been a part of pornography for a long, long time. As far back as 1990, an academic paper – The Image Of Librarians In Pornography – was being discussed at the American Culture Association in Toronto. The paper identified 49 pulp erotic novels published in the 1980s dealing with librarians, with titles such as Bang The Librarian Hard ("Teaching students the joys of library research was Samantha's speciality"), Horny Peeping Lesbians (featuring a scene where the ponytailed-and-bespectacled librarian sucks off six nerdy research students in the course of one coffee break), and the charmingly titled Degraded Raped Librarians ("She couldn't wait to get back to the library, for she now had much more than just books to offer the older boys and their fathers. Much more!!") abounding.

A place to play

Dr Simon Moore, a psychologist of sexuality at London Metropolitan University, thinks an appreciation for the nerdy girl is ingrained in a lot of male psyches. "Nerdy women are seen by some as a challenge," he says. "Whereas some women think that they can 'tame' wild men, nerdy women pose the opposite challenge: 'Can I be the one to corrupt them, the one to bring out their wild side?' Also, society has empowered women to be more sexually confident in getting what they want. This can be intimidating for men who want to be the lead in sexual behaviour, at least initially. Geeky women represent the epitome of the non-confident passive woman in the area of sexual behaviour and attraction. They're much less intimidating."

Those of you who find non-confident, passive women less intimidating could do a lot worse than stopping by Otaku Booty (Otakubooty.bootyproject.org), your one-stop shop for geek dating. The site was set up four years ago by John Booty, after he found himself becoming increasingly sick of what he describes as the "seedy meat markets full of anonymous profiles" he was seeing on other dating sites. The site takes its name from otaku, a somewhat derogatory term for a group of Japanese males defined by John as "obsessed nerds – guys that are withdrawn and do nothing but build robot models and play dating-simulation games all day" (the term roughly translates as 'housebound'). But John, like a number of other US geeks, reclaimed the title and used it to help "create a site for the slice of nerds that are smart, funny, and have non-crippled social and sex lives".

"WE'VE HAD TO REMOVE SOME OF THE GIRLS' PICS – THEY'VE GONE ON TO BECOME HIGH-SCHOOL TEACHERS"

John admits Otaku Booty has developed a lot faster than he thought it would, and notes that "most of our members are from the upper strata of nerd-dom". Indeed, a quick look around their messageboard finds the expected discussions of cosplay, World Of Warcraft and Final Fantasy, balanced out with lots and lots of pictures of the tits and asses of the assorted members of the site. Have webcam, will flash.

John has one answer when asked if he thought Otaku Booty would be a success. "I knew we'd made it the first time I heard about people having sex as a result of the site," he recalls. "I know it's the obvious outcome of all this, but I remember how hilarious it seemed at the time. 'People are fucking! Because of a website I made!' The secret to any networking website is that people shag each other's brains out, even if you don't hit them over the head telling them that's what they're supposed to be doing."

NERD MUSIC

BEATS, BLEEPS AND GEEKS

Music performed by nerds reached new heights in 1996, when beloved family entertainer 'Weird' Al Yankovic released his inspired Coolio parody 'Amish Paradise' upon an unsuspecting but grateful public. However, this hasn't stopped the protected-pocket fraternity from stepping into the recording studio.

Commodore 64 covers

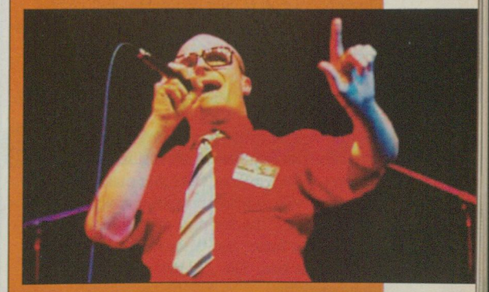
Danish rockers Press Play On Tape (above) make sweet music for those of us who still wake up in a cold sweat at our inability to find the secret room on the last level of Rainbow Islands, with an oeuvre consisting solely of covers of Commodore 64 in-game music. One of the most impressive is 'Play! A Video Game Symphony', featuring a medley of your favourite C64 songs performed by a touring 80-piece orchestra.

Chiptunes

Synthesiser too expensive? Why not take a trip to your local car-boot sale, spend £5 on a dead 1980s gaming system, and make music out of that? Chiptunes is a genre using the synth chip from old computers as a main instrument, and of particular note is Dorothy's Magic Bag, who produce gabba armed with only the MOS Technology soundchip from a CBM-II.

Nerdcore rap

Nerdcore figurehead MC Frontalot (below) has a diss song aimed at the makers of geek card-collecting game Magic: The Gathering; MC Chris rips mics over the theme music from videogame Katamari Damacy; while MC Hawking is, you guessed it, a comedy rapping version of everyone's favourite crippled member of the Pontifical Academy of Sciences. None of these artists are expected to appear on the next Mobb Deep album.



YOU CAN NOW BUY A CYBER GLOVE WHICH BUZZES HAND GESTURES OVER THE NET INTO A PARTNER'S WAITING GENITALS

"Intimate appliances and teledildonics are not replacements for sex, but they're fun replacements for no sex if you're online just to play with others. You're forced to be creative and communicative with each other." And if teledildonics are too complicated for you, you can always turn your Ipod into a roving sex toy with the Ohmipod, a plug-in for your MP3 player that vibrates in time with the music. Considering the nerd clientele it's aimed at, this means lots of orgasms caused by They Might Be Giants and Tom Lehrer.

There's one particular aspect of nerd-girl sexuality that everyone we spoke to agreed on. "There's a huge overlap between nerd and BDSM culture," was Anna Logue's view, while Cloei Carson puts it simply as, "It's horrible to say this, but we're all kinky little girls." Regina Lynn attributes it to the benefits of a good education: "It takes a certain level of confidence in oneself to explore BDSM. Intelligent women, particularly those in intellectually demanding fields, have that confidence. It requires a highly developed imagination and excellent communication skills to play with dominance and submission, and even more so to sustain it as a lifestyle. It doesn't surprise me that world attracts brainy women." A quick search of the profiles on one of the internet's premier S&M dating sites throws up nearly 1,300 profiles containing the words 'geek' or 'geeky', and 500 containing 'nerd' or 'nerdy'.

Dr Moore comes up with this explanation for the crossover: "Difference is a lot more important than conventional attractiveness for people who engage in fetishistic or sadomasochistic behaviour. There's a lot more acceptance, both in the bondage/S&M lifestyle communities and the so-called 'nerd' communities, for the unusual and the different."

But after the whips and handcuffs are put away, it all ends up with two things: computers and sex. And if forced into making a choice, which group activity would the sexually active nerd around town rather fill her evenings with: a 20-nerd LAN party or a 20-nerd orgy? Anna Logue pauses when asked the question, shoots back the obligatory winking emoticon, and replies, "Who says you can't have both?" For the new generation of nerd-girls-who-fuck, this could well be their clarion call.

Geeky sex toys

So nerds have their own specialised pornography, their own sexually active communities, and their own research into why we find them attractive. But that's not enough for them – now they've got their own sex toys. Teledildonics are the hot new vibrators for the technologically literate: vibrators controlled over computers and perfect for remote sex, operated over the net by an absent partner or complete stranger. One company has even gone so far as to market a 'Cyber Glove', a wearable mitt that transmits your hand gestures across ADSL lines into your waiting partner's genitals. Regina Lynn, 'Sex Drive' columnist for Wired.com and author of The Sexual Revolution 2.0, says, "They're sexy. Once you make an erotic connection with another person, you transcend the technology. The foreplay of 'Is it working?', 'I think mine froze' and 'Your webcam is really dark' segues into, 'Oh… baby!' once you get things working.

ARE YOU A SEXY NERD?

Don't just nod, send us your photos! Use your nerdy computers to email them to us at bizarre@dennis.co.uk, and we'll print them for the world to see. Thanks nerds. The geek shall inherit the Earth!

FRANK KOZIK

PUNK ART

FRANK KOZIK

THIS IS WHAT HAPPENS WHEN AN ANTISOCIAL, CHAIN-SMOKING EX-MILITARY MAN OPENS HIS BRAINS

WORDS BILLY CHAINSAW

Frank Kozik once said he didn't want to be regarded as an artist. It's ironic, then, that the Spanish-born maverick not only became a maestro of his craft, but – as creator of some of the world's most collectable vinyl toys – is now cooler than the 'berg that sank the Titanic. If you've seen any US band flyers from the 1990s you'll probably know Kozik's work, as he designed posters for Nirvana, Pearl Jam, the Beastie Boys and many others. Here, the chain-smoking coffee addict opens his world to Bizarre.

Where and how were you raised?
I grew up in Spain under Franco. It was a very time-warped childhood.
Were you a rebel?
I came to the US when I was 15, and sort of just became an adult. I did have a couple of years of petty crime as a teenager, but nothing violent.
As you joined the Air Force, art evidently wasn't your first career of choice. Why did you join up?
It was either go into the military or go to jail for a while – easy choice. It was good. The military gave me tools to use my potential.
How did you kickstart a life in art?
I wanted to be in a punk band in the 1980s, but I sucked. So I did posters instead. I wanted to be a cartoonist, but didn't have the ability to draw or write. But I could paste up a decent flyer.

"SMOKERS ARE TREATED LIKE LEPERS, SO I LIKE BUGGING PEOPLE WITH MY SMOKING TOYS"

Above A selection of Kozik's posters and flyers for various bands in the US

Below Kozik's Dr Bomb, the US field surgeon

Retro-cartoons, religion, military, political propaganda and pornography are all recurring themes in your early poster work. Do these themes reflect your personality, or were they the things you found most visually appealing at the time?
What I drew was a mixture of stuff I collected at the time, or things that were somehow 'cool' in relation to the scene or culture the bands were into. Later, I started doing 'anti' posters – stuff that was 'really uncool'. That worked as well.

For every halo-wearing innocent in your work there was usually a knife-wielding devil kid. Did this reflect your troubled upbringing?
There isn't a lot of my childhood or personal self involved in my artwork. It's its own thing. For example, there's none of my own work in my house – I don't keep an archive. I make stuff, disperse it, and then make different stuff. I'm more interested in it as a long-term 'one giant piece' rather than anything else.

Have your influences changed?
They change constantly. I've been spending time in Asia, so my focus has moved away from European and American 'pop' to the weird Asian version of it. The stuff I do now is bland, colourful and just a little off. There's no anger. I'm just having a good time.

There are moments, though, when confrontational elements have appeared in your work – like the Hitler kitsch stuff in your last UK exhibition.
That was just more about being entirely opposite. The gallery was a very 'leftie' spot, and the show was on May Day [international workers' day], so I wanted to do the most unexpected possible thing in that context.

Your vinyl toys are hugely popular. When did you first become aware of the material, and how did you get involved in the scene?
Around 1997. I got obsessed with the early stuff, and it turned out one of the innovators in Japan, BxH, was into my posters, so we hooked up and my first vinyl was released in 2000. I have more than 200 different toy releases that have either been released or are currently being made.

What's the story behind Dr Bomb?
He's a slightly crazed and burnt-out field surgeon on the Eastern Front in the Second World War, who tends to live on rage and sniffing ether. He got his duelling scars in Heidelberg and is involved in a plot to kill Hitler. He likes ice cream.

Why is smoking a recurrent aspect of your work?
In the US, smokers are the new lepers, and since I smoke this is my way to bug everyone via my toys. The Mongers were created to capitalise on the success of my Smokin' Labbit character.

Describe a typical day in the life of Frank Kozik.
I get up, fuck around, ride my motorcycle to the studio, get on the internet, sell some stuff, work on designs, hang out with my girlfriend... then the next day I might fly to Tokyo, have meetings, do an event... then a few days later I'm back at the studio. It's a mixture of normal days combined with weird travels. I'm very unsocial. I spend my free time riding my motorcycles. It's not a glamorous lifestyle, but it's a happy one. And I'm lucky to have a cool girlfriend who's as weird and antisocial as I am. It's a good life.

THE DEVIL'S SURGEON

IN 1990, DANNY ROLLING BRUTALLY MURDERED FIVE STUDENTS IN A SLEEPY FLORIDA TOWN. BUT EVEN WHEN THEY WERE DEAD, THE KILLER WAS FAR FROM FINISHED WITH HIS VICTIMS

WORDS JAMES MARRISON ILLUSTRATION 1000MONKEYS.CO.UK

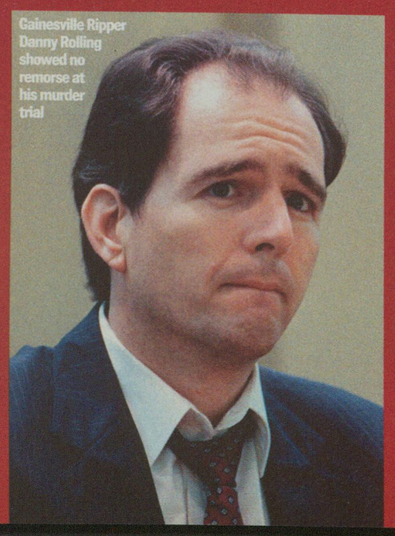
Last year, at 6pm on 25 October, Danny Rolling became the 63rd prisoner to be executed in Florida since the state reintroduced the death penalty in 1979. Rolling had turned to God during his last years on Death Row, but there were no pleas for forgiveness from the relatives of his victims – instead, many had come to watch Rolling die.

Rolling, who'd once broken into song during his murder trial, stunned onlookers by crooning a hymn he'd composed himself. As the sodium pentathol began to take hold, Rolling kept singing the line: "None greater than Thee, oh Lord." Thirteen minutes later, he was dead.



Gainesville Ripper Danny Rolling showed no remorse at his murder trial

Sadist, murderer, rapist and necrophile, Rolling will go down in history as one of America's most savage and unrepentant killers – which is exactly what he wanted. Rolling had craved fame and wallowed in his celebrity status while awaiting execution on Death Row, and by sentencing him to be death the judicial system had played right into his hands.

"It's true that Rolling was guilty of terrible crimes," David Elliot, Communications Director for the National Coalition to Abolish the Death Penalty, told Bizarre. "It's equally true that, as the years wore on after the killings, the memory of Rolling's victims faded in the public's mind. So when it came to the execution, Florida residents knew Rolling's name, but not the names of his victims. And that's one thing that's wrong with the death penalty – the victims are forgotten while the criminals become rock stars."

In the end, it was a quick and painless death for Rolling, who'd eaten every last crumb of his lobster tail and strawberry cheesecake last meal. And he'd undoubtedly be happy to learn that a film is now being made about his life.

Josh Townsend's The Gainesville Ripper recounts the three days when terror struck the town of Gainesville, Florida, and the 32-year-old director vividly remembers what it was like when Rolling embarked on his murder spree.

"I lived through it all," Townsend says. "I'm from Gainesville – it's my hometown. I was born there. I was in 10th grade when he killed those five students, the weekend before school started. I remember it all like yesterday. There was a mass exodus of students, and ➡

Danny Rolling's final Gainesville victims, Tracy Paules and Manuel Taboada, were killed inside their apartment. Even a huge chain-link fence wasn't enough to keep him out you weren't even able to make a simple phone call because so many parents were desperately calling to check up on their kids.

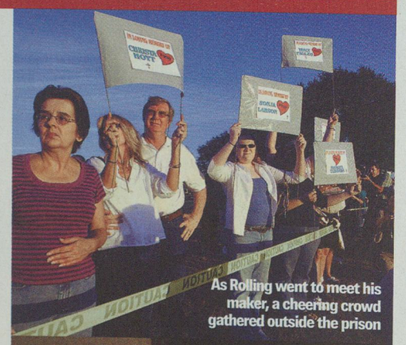
"While the killings were happening, local stores ran out of pepper spray and all the gun shops sold out. Everyone had a weapon of some sort. But the weirdest thing is that every rumour we heard – like the one about the murderer severing Christa Hoyt's head and leaving it on a shelf – turned out to be true. It's such a small college town that news travelled quickly."

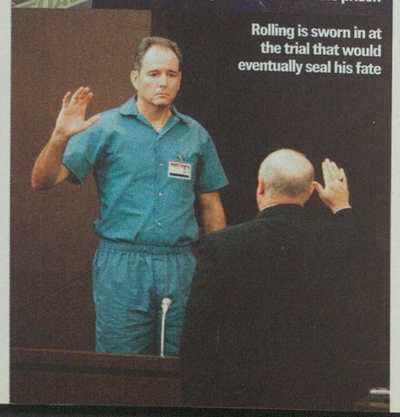
Terror in Gainesville

Rolling's killing spree began on 24 August 1990, when he spotted first-year students Sonja Larson, 18, and Christina Powell, 17, who'd just moved into a new apartment in Gainesville. They were on the second floor of a four-floor building in Williamsburg Village, a cozy cul-de-sac with a view of the nearby woods. Larson was a science and pre-engineering major and Powell was studying architecture, and they were just two of the thousands of students filling the town.

But while Larson and Powell settled into their new home, they were unaware that they'd caught attention of a drifter who'd arrived in Gainesville a few days earlier, and had been shoplifting in the same Wal-Mart they'd visited earlier that day.



As Rolling went to meet his maker, a cheering crowd gathered outside the prison



Rolling is sworn in at the trial that would eventually seal his fate

Now Rolling had set up camp in nearby woods, and was planning to pay them a night-time visit.

Powerfully built and 6ft2in tall, with brown hair and hazel eyes, Rolling was a hardened criminal who'd spent much of the previous decade in jail. With convictions in three states for armed robbery under his belt, Rolling swore to himself that he'd kill eight people. It was part of a pact he'd made with Lucifer; a soul for every year he'd served in prison. So far, he'd killed three.

Years after the Gainesville killings, Rolling wrote an account of the events that took place there – The Making Of A Serial-Killer – which he co-authored with Sondra London, to whom he later proposed in jail (see Bizarre 111, 'Serial-Killer Groupies'). His account is written in the third person, and begins with Rolling arriving on a Greyhound bus.

"The Grim Reaper came calling on the little college town, not on the wings of some terrible strange bird but on the screaming wheels of man's invention," Rolling wrote. "The silver and black Greyhound swung into the station like a rolling coffin. A fugitive from justice stepped lightly off, carrying a navy-blue sports bag filled with tomorrow's pain."

Rolling claimed mental illness ran in his family, and that at the time of the killings he was in the grip of a spirit called Gemini, who he described as "an evil puppet master born long ago in a sewage-filled cell in a Mississippi prison". With his evil twin pulling the strings, Rolling followed Larson and Powell, then returned to his tent in the woods, waiting for the to Sun dip beyond the darkening

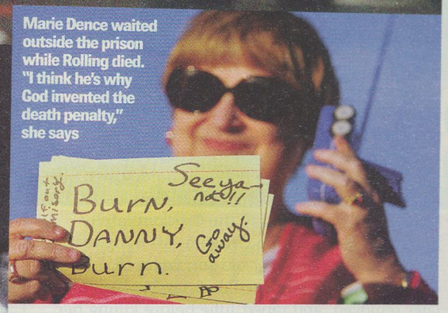
Moments after Rolling was sentenced to death, Mario Taboada, Manuel's brother, leapt to his feet and shouted: "Five years! You're going down in five years!"



Marie Dence waited outside the prison while Rolling died. "I think he's why God invented the death penalty," she says

Rolling killed time by playing his guitar and singing. He also spoke to himself and recorded ramblings on a tape recorder. The tape, later retrieved by police, ended with the words: "I'm going to sign off. There's something I got to do." According to his account, Rolling stole a bike from a trailer park and headed back to the girls' apartment. He then watched them from the edge of the woods until they went to bed at around midnight. At 3.30am he climbed the outside stairs. Finding tried to prise the wooden doorframe open with a screwdriver, but it wouldn't budge. He called upon Gemini for assistance. Gemini, according to Rolling, promptly obliged; when he tried the handle, he found the door was unlocked. Wearing a ski mask, black clothes and gloves, he was equipped with an automatic pistol and a military-style K-Bar knife. In a few brutal minutes he'd covered Sonja Larson's mouth with duct tape and stabbed her to death. As she died, Rolling promised he'd come back for her later – possibly the last words she ever heard. Neighbours later told how they'd heard George Michael's 'Faith' playing loudly, accompanied by bangs, and had assumed the girls were hanging pictures.

Rolling then went downstairs to where Christina was still fast asleep, where he raped and killed her. He then returned upstairs to Sonja. He tore off her clothes and spread her legs wide open on the bed and put her arms over her head. But she was "too bloody to rape", so he went back downstairs and had sex with Christina's corpse again, chewing on her breasts like "a mad dog gnaws a bone". Once satisfied, Rolling helped himself to the contents of the dead girls' fridge.

Rolling claimed the next thing he knew it was 11am, and he was riding his bike. He felt an urge to check his rucksack, and in it found a plastic sandwich bag containing one of Christina Powell's nipples. Rolling said he couldn't remember taking it, and that he threw the bag in the gutter.

Just nine hours after police had found the bodies of Powell and Larson, they were called to another apartment where they discovered the mutilated body of Christa Hoyt, aged 19. But this time the attack had been even more frenzied.

Rolling later said Christa reminded him of his estranged wife and mother of his child, Omatha Ann Halko. In a rage, Rolling hacked off Hoyt's head and placed it – at eye level – on ➡

KILLER STALKING

GETTING CLOSER TO DANNY ROLLING

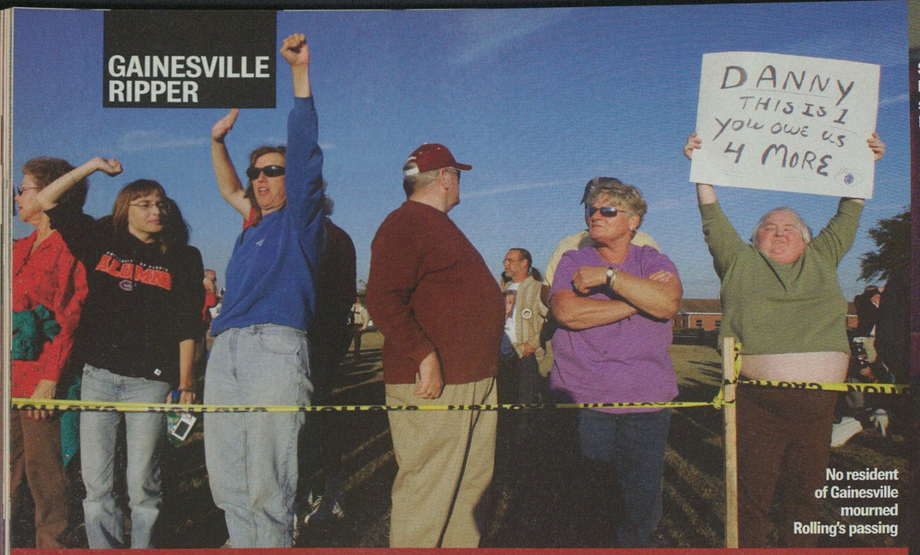
While on Death Row, Rolling wrote poetry and his memoirs. He was also a successful artist, and his work is now collected the world over. To get a sense of the man behind the horror, we spoke to Rolling's former penpal and a fan of his artwork.

Tod Bohannon: Rolling collector

"I have some Rolling paintings, and they're amongst my favourite pieces," Tod Bohannon told us. Bohannon runs a murderobilia website and is a collector of Rolling's darkly sexual portraits. "I have friends that have about a dozen Rolling oil paintings that are really good," he says. "I've seen a sketch he did of himself that was over a grand to buy – a small price to pay for original Rolling artwork. I've also seen a piece that was reported to be his last painting, and that was outstanding. All Rolling's work was based on a dark personal vision, so when you collect his stuff you're not collecting a pencil sketch of some celebrity that a serial-killer drew to masturbate to. Instead, Danny's pieces were real art, real emotion, real pain, and because of that I feel his work is eminently collectable."

Thomas Loudamy: Rolling penpal

Thomas Loudamy lives in Fremont, California, and has corresponded with hundreds of serial-killers. But it was Danny Rolling who sparked his interest in contacting murderers. "It took three-and-a-half years to get Rolling to talk to me, but finally it worked," Loudamy says. "Our exchanges began when I wrote to him to discuss the death of a mutual friend, and he wrote pages and pages of poetry to try and console me. Afterwards, he thanked me for talking to him as a human being, not as a monster or freak – like most people did. We discussed how death would be a release for him – not the release most people seek, but after 16 years on Death Row he was ready to check out. We kept in touch until shortly before he died. I stopped writing so he could get any matters in order he needed to before entering the abyss."



No resident of Gainesville mourned Rolling's passing the bookshelf in her bedroom. After slicing off her nipples, which he laid on the bed beside her, he carefully propped Hoyt's body on the bed and bent her over at the waist. He then 'gutted' Hoyt by cutting her open from her chest to pubic bone.

The first victims had been found on Sunday, but by Tuesday afternoon police had discovered two more bodies: roommates Tracy Paules and Manuel Taboada. Rolling had overpowered Manuel while he slept, then raped and murdered Tracy before posing her nude body in a doorway.

Within 48 hours, Rolling had killed five people, all students. There was panic in the small university town. Many students fled the campus for good and nobody in Gainesville slept alone.

Catching the killer

After his Gainesville killing spree, Rolling fled to Tampa in a stolen car. Now in the grip of another demon – this time the freewheeling, gun-toting outlaw Rolling named Jesse Lang – he embarked on a series of robberies. However, he was soon arrested while trying to hold up a supermarket, less than two weeks after the first murder.

To begin with, Rolling was just another bank robber awaiting trial, and wasn't a suspect in one of the widest murder hunts in US history. But police were beginning to feel he might be tied to a triple murder committed 10 months earlier in Shreveport, Louisiana – Rolling's hometown.

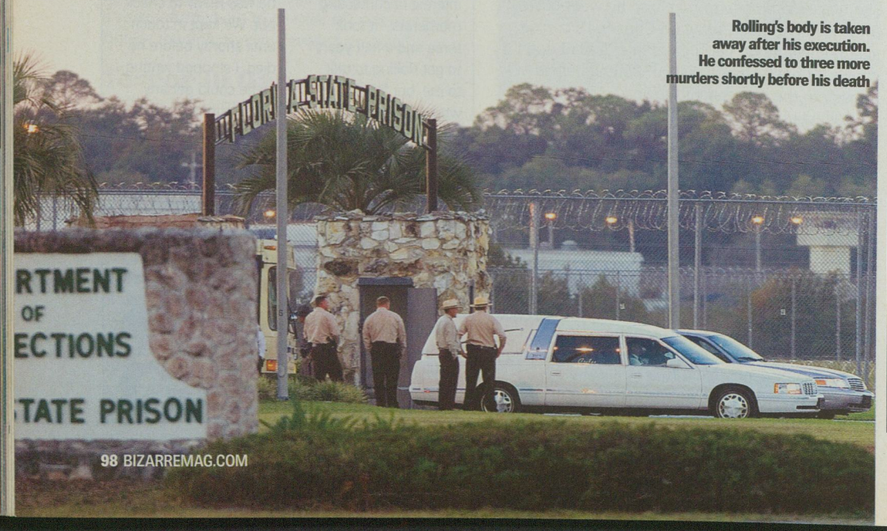
On 4 November 1989, at around 6pm, someone had broken into the Grissom family home and stabbed Tom Grissom, his daughter Julie, and her eight-year-old son Sean, to death. The killer had used duct tape, which he later removed, and raped Julie before killing her. He'd then arranged her carefully on the bed with her legs parted in a sexually provocative manner, before fanning her hair lovingly on the pillow. Rolling had been seen by many witnesses in the town on the day of the murder, and the similarities between the way Julie Grissom had been posed and the recent slayings in Gainesville were too much to ignore.

When Rolling went to the prison dentist, investigators were able to get a sample of his DNA, which matched traces of semen found in three of the Gainesville slayings. But despite the compelling evidence against him, Rolling initially denied all the charges – it turned out that, despite the frenzied nature of his attacks, he'd actually been fairly careful.

Rolling had removed all the pieces of duct tape from his victims, save one, and carefully scrubbed two of his Gainesville victims with detergent. However, in addition to the DNA evidence, police had found Rolling's tent in the woods, and with it his homemade cassettes, the screwdriver he'd used to try and break into Larson and Powell's apartment, and a pair of jeans stained with Manuel Taboada's blood.

Also, despite his predicament, Rolling couldn't help boasting of his exploits to his fellow prisoners. Apart from his desire to kill eight people for his time spent in jail, Rolling also craved fame. A failed country and western singer, the only way he could think to achieve celebrity status was to rape and murder his way to notoriety. His cellmates were quick to rat him out.

Faced with the evidence against him, Rolling confessed to investigators in January 1993. On the eve of his trial, he told circuit judge Stan R Morris, "There are some things you just can't run from, this being one of those," and pleaded guilty. The crimescenes were so shocking that many photos had to be censored at the trial in case they prejudiced the court. "I've got to get out of here," Rolling was heard to whisper at one point, but overall he seemed resigned to his fate. The jury unanimously recommended the death sentence and Judge Morris agreed. Danny Rolling was put on Death Row on 20 April 1994, and in October 2006 went to his death, singing all the way.



Rolling's body is taken away after his execution. He confessed to three more murders shortly before his death

FILM OF THE MONTH

The Science of Sleep

Michel Gondry's back to confuse you again

Out 16 February

Michel Gondry's latest surreal opus deals with dreams in much the same way as his previous film, Eternal Sunshine Of The Spotless Mind, dealt with memories – it's an incredibly inventive, disorientating journey into the subconscious, with overlapping realities.

Mexican dreamboat Gael García Bernal is the confused, creative, unhinged Stephane, who lands himself a dead-end job at a Parisian calendar publisher, and has extremely vivid, hyper-real dreams which shape his life, taking sleepwalking to a new level. His reality is mixed with fantasy; often it's not clear to him whether he's awake or asleep, which proves to be particularly disastrous when he's attempting to get an amorous relationship going with his shy neighbour Stephanie (Charlotte Gainsbourg).

This is perfect cinema fodder for Gondry (who wrote the script himself – his previous two, Eternal Sunshine… and Human Nature were written by Charlie Kaufman). The film is clearly personal: the visionary Gondry once had a dull job at a calendar publisher, and Stephane, like the director, is highly imaginative, almost naively so, impressing the object of his affection with kooky creations such as a one-second time machine, and 3D glasses that enable the wearer to see the world in… 3D. Gondry himself gets to play around with a lot of DIY special effects, as he's done in some of his most celebrated music videos (for the likes of Björk and The White Stripes), and we get some very charming, pretty moments involving tinfoil, tinsel and eggcups, as well as an awesome animated action sequence featuring a city made out of toilet rolls.

The dysfunctional love story, plagued with mishaps as Stephanie navigates Stephane's minor mental breakdowns, lacks the emotional punch and earthiness of Eternal Sunshine, and some of this is too zany for its own good. But ultimately it's sweet, funny and wholly original; it's one of a kind and a great trip into Gondry's mind. Alex Godfrey

Paging Dr Freud...

Farmyard fun and games soon turn nasty when Vincent Cassel's around

Satan (Sheitan)

Teen slaughter goes down to the farm

Out 23 February

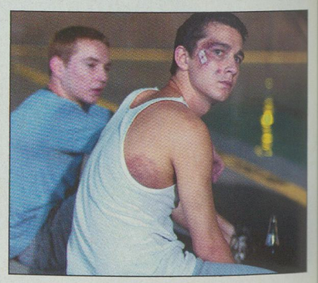
Irréversible star Vincent Cassel delivers the most deranged performance of his career in this pitch-black comedy horror from French director/co-writer Kim Chapiron. Ultra-hip and insane, this largely handheld-shot film about townie clubbers caught up in an inbred, rural hell mixes the anarchic energy of Dobermann with the insular oddity of Calvaire. A demented highlight of Frightfest 2006, it's so sharp and twisted that even the fussiest genre fan will be in stitches.

There's always something completely satisfying about watching unsympathetic upstarts coming unstuck, and the multicultural gang at the heart of this film are deliberately obnoxious tossers. All right off their tits after a night celebrating Christmas in a Parisian club, they can only see potential pussy, not neon-lit danger, when the appropriately named temptress Eve (À Ma Soeur! actress Roxane Mesquida) invites them back to her country home. Consequently, you'll be rooting for her maniacally grinning housekeeper Joseph (a scene-stealingly creepy Cassel) as he sets in motion a satanic orgy of misery and extreme mayhem.

Newcomer Chapiron directs with gothic imagination and visual aplomb, subverting horror clichés and giving restraint and political correctness the finger. The acerbic dialogue is particularly hilarious, with Joseph's insults almost matching Borat for side-splitting vulgarity. Ultimately, it's more disturbing than scary, using sick surprises and Grand Guignol excess to enhance the slow-drip atmospherics. It's a killer combination, culminating in what's likely to remain the year's craziest finale. Sloan Freer

ALSO OUT

On 16 February we get HOT FUZZ – not really Bizarre territory, but it's from the Shaun Of The Dead team, therefore essential. We haven't seen the THE HILLS HAVE EYES sequel (2 March), so check that out at your own risk, and the same goes for GHOST RIDER (2 March), but that one stars Nic Cage as a motorbike-riding skeleton on fire – how can you not?



A GUIDE TO RECOGNIZING YOUR SAINTS

Out 2 March

The mean streets of 80s New York are the setting for this powerful coming-of-age drama, based on writer/director Dito Montiel's autobiography. Robert Downey Jr plays the adult Dito reflecting on his adolescent struggle for survival, while Shia LaBeouf is quietly poignant as his teen self. A familiar story, but vibrantly told. Sloan Freer

Inland Empire

ynch is back to his mind-boiling best

1 March

ke icon David Lynch returns to the big screen llowing a six-year hiatus with this uncompromising, scrambling drama. A piece of digital art rather than entertainment, it's so cerebrally free-flowing and al that no amount of plot spoilers could reveal its es. This is old-school Lynch, in his purest and most efficiently self-indulgent form. Not the crowd-pleasing ite of Mulholland Drive, this is a beautiful, ching and terrifying feature, to be experienced, derstood. The sort of atmospheric enigma that nds repeated viewings.

No-one does mindfuck cinema like Lynch – especially pe of merging-realities tale, in which a Hollywood ess (Laura Dern) faces an escalating nightmare after ing a coveted role in a cursed studio production. ck's more, no other filmmaker gives women such material, exploring the eternal madonna/whore ndrum with an intoxicating darkness that's stingingly sadistic yet strangely affectionate. Little wonder Dern visibly relishes her part, pouring out her soul as starlet Nikki, while a nerve-jangling score sonically reflects her emotional conflict. Embarking on an ill-advised affair with her lead man (Justin Theroux), she becomes increasingly consumed by her character, Susan, until neither she – nor we – are certain who she really is, or whether the disturbing scenes that unfold are depicting Nikki or Susan's life.

Is there an exact explanation for events? Perhaps not, as Lynch apparently never had a full script anyway, choosing instead to make up everything as he went along. Which vaguely accounts for the delicious quirks, including sexy young hookers dancing and lip-synching to 'The Loco-Motion', and giant talking rabbits. At almost three hours long, this will probably alienate less die-hard fans, but even if it could have benefited from slight pruning, there's no denying the genius and imagination at work. Sloan Freer

ue 9 February

ed had his cameras set up on The den Gate Bridge for the whole of 2004, ing many people jumping to their deaths. ntage is interspersed with interviews their friends, families, and the people saw them on the bridge at the time, and ually. Most of all, it's fascinating to hear e people's mental states and then to ctly see them ending their lives – it scars ers. Amazing. Alex Godfrey

LYNCH'S EMPIRE

The title of David Lynch's new movie came from a chat he had with Laura Dern. Dern mentioned that her husband was from the Inland Empire, an area east of Los Angeles county. When she said this Lynch's eyes glazed over and he stopped listening to what she was saying, mesmerised by the phrase. He then decided to use the name as the title for his new movie because "I like the word inland, and I like the word empire".

THE ILLUSIONIST

Out 16 February

We're having magic films practically thrown at us at the moment, and Edward Norton is predictably great in this one as expert magician Eisenheim, who seems to possess supernatural powers, blowing people's minds and causing outrage in equal measure. Set in Vienna 100 years ago, this is a very stylish and intimate romantic thriller, taking in politics, corruption and murder, and the illusions are awesome. Alex Godfrey

The Amazing Mr No Legs (1975)

"Don't cross him or he'll cut you down to size!" screamed the cover of this hilarious exploitation gem's long-deleted UK video release. That'll be Mr No Legs, a mob enforcer with a shotgun cunningly installed in each wheelchair arm and a ninja throwing star at the centre of each wheel. Korean War veteran and karate champ Ted Vollrath portrays the stumpy sadist, who constantly fails to please his drug-lord boss D'Angelo. "Get this right," the guvnor warns No Legs, "or you're gonna find yourself on a street corner with a tin cup and a handful of lead pencils." An understandably upset No Legs tells a trusted confidant: "Damn him! I'll show him who he's gonna put out on the street with pencils!"

BEST OF THE REST

The Alien Dead (1980)

Of this ludicrous sci-fi/zombie hybrid, director Fred Olen Ray has said, "It's in colour and in focus and that's all anybody better say about it." He was right about the colour.

The Anthropophagous Beast (1980)

Cannibal-slasher flick which became a UK video nasty, thanks to the titular fiend munching on both a ripped-out foetus and his own guts.

Astro Zombies (1968)

Zany director Ted V Mikels' sci-fi lunacy about aliens running around in cool masks and transplanting human organs.

The Man Who Fell To Earth

David Bowie's intergalactic masterpiece

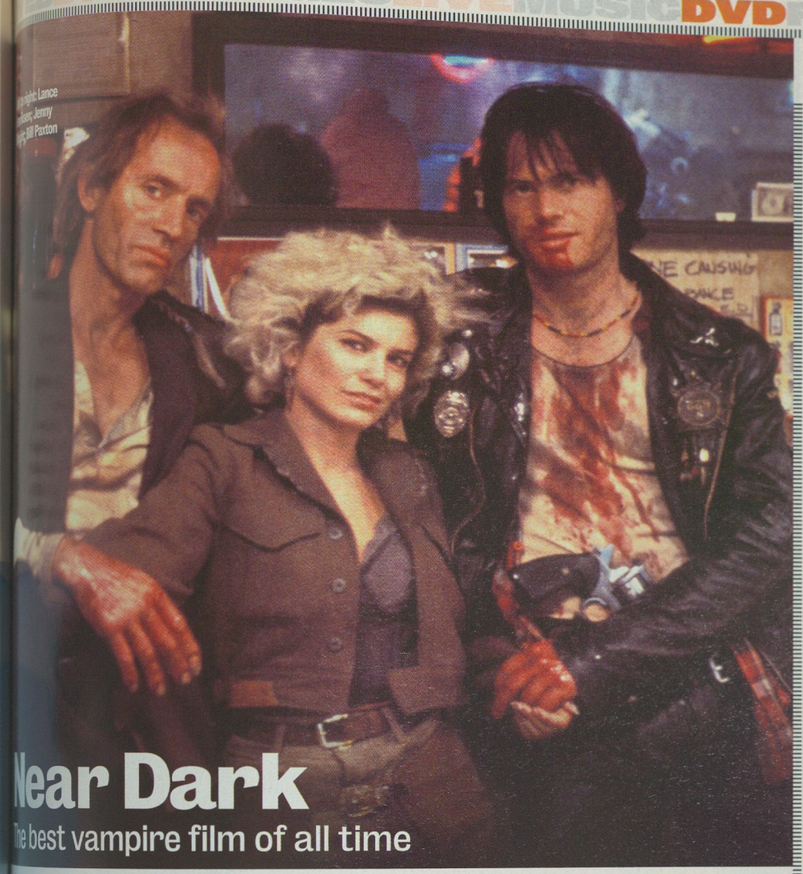
Out now

Back in the 70s, people thought David Bowie had come from another planet. So it was an inspired move for Don't Look Now director Nicolas Roeg to cast the singer as an alien in his ambitious adaptation of Walter Tevis's sci-fi novel. But what's particularly pleasing, given the normally abysmal acting skills of musicians, is just how brilliant his performance turned out to be. Critics may mock the movies he's done since, though even they couldn't deny it was Bowie who was the vital component in this 1976 cult favourite.

From his ethereal pallor and androgynous physique to his shock of bright red hair and considered delivery, Bowie is Thomas Jerome Newton made flesh – the ageless humanoid on a mission to get water for his dying planet. Using his superior intelligence, Newton becomes rich from his intergalactic inventions, only to be corrupted and ultimately trapped by earthbound vices, including television, booze and sex. It's a tragic and deeply poignant fall from grace, highlighted by Newton's surreal and dreamily shot reminiscences of a home and family he'll never see again.

Sexy Bowie aside, the beauty of this demanding picture lies in its multi-layered narrative and startling, fragmented visuals. Part condemnation of the modern world, part fairy tale allegory, the film reaches beyond the pulp roots of Tevis's work, yet still titillates when necessary. Candy Clark's literally pant-wetting terror when she witnesses her extraterrestrial lover's true appearance is unforgettable, as is the sensational Roeg trademark of intercutting sex scenes with entirely incongruous material. Like Newton himself, the feature was ahead of its time and remains a classic of contemporary cinema. Which is fortunate since, except for its documentary, this DVD's extras are poor, with the new, exclusive Roeg interview especially dreadful. Sloan Freer

With his skeletal physique, odd eyes, and shock of livid hair, Bowie was a frighteningly convincing alien



Near Dark

The best vampire film of all time

Out now

Strange Days director Kathryn Bigelow made her name with this 1987 blood-sucking take on the traditional western. Recently hailed as the greatest vampire movie of all time, it gave a flagging movie sub-genre a visceral and imaginative adrenaline shot, earning itself cult status in the process. Any self-respecting goth will know the film's tale like the inside of their coffin, as Near Dark deliberately contradicts the conventional folklore of Bram Stoker et al. Essentially, it's a fucked-up and effortlessly cool love story, with Adrian Pasdar's simple country boy Caleb falling for the angelic-looking Mae (Jenny Wright), only to discover she and her ultra-violent 'family' are claret-quaffing fiends. There's no fang nonsense or lame crucifix aversions, just lean, mean, gory grit, as the vampires slaughter their way across America's Midwest.

Precisely how far stars Bill Paxton and Lance Henriksen went for their art is revealed in a superb documentary, Living In Darkness. This is the highlight of a fairly anaemic package of extras, but which also includes a fascinating director's commentary from Bigelow. Sloan Freer

STILL OUT

THE LONELY DVDS STILL WAITING TO BE PURCHASED BY YOU

Irreversible (Bizarre 120)
We said: "Disorienting, intense and scary, putting the fear of God in you – fear of the world, of man, always (and of violent S&M clubs called Le Rectum)."

Brothers Quay 1979-2003 (Bizarre 119)
We said: "They act as a counterbalance and prove that wildness of imagination can be achieved without the excessive use of big-bucks technology."

Hard Candy (Bizarre 118)
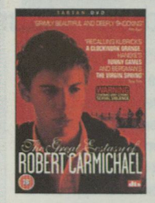
We said: "One of the best thrillers of the year, despite being set in one or two rooms, with two people… investigating the moral grey area between the black and white."

THE GREAT ECSTASY OF ROBERT CARMICHAEL



Out 26 February

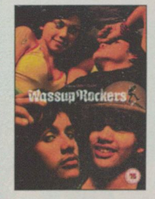
A disconcerting trawl through the lives of a group of disaffected teens, this desolate drama focuses on a talented cello player who fucks up his future in favour of drugs and ultra-violence. British director Clay employs similar terror tactics to Kubrick in A Clockwork Orange, and the result is so horrifically powerful it'll leave you reeling in disbelief. Billy Chainsaw

HAZE

Out now

The latest mindbender from the director of Tetsuo – who also takes the lead role – follows a man who wakes up trapped in a vast concrete maze and bleeding from a stomach wound. How and why he got there is unknown. With spikes in the floor, hammers hidden in the walls and the rotten carcasses of previous victims all around him, his challenge is to escape before he bleeds to death. Claustrophobic and clever, this is a return to form for Shinya Tsukamoto, the true master of Asian cinema. Brendan Maltman

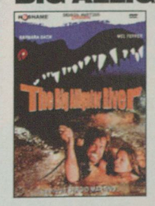
WASSUP ROCKERS



Out 26 February

When teenage Latino outsiders take a trip from the ghetto to skateboard in Beverly Hills, a series of sex'n'violence misadventures sees them stranded and on the run from the cops. Although Kids director Larry Clark often courts controversy, here the emphasis is on storytelling, and he constructively splices this urban drama with faux-documentary elements to create a movie so raw it oozes realism and adrenaline. Billy Chainsaw

BIG ALLIGATOR RIVER



Out now; Noshamefilms.com

Cheap and cheesy Italian Jaws knock-off from the 1970s with, you guessed it, a big alligator chomping on tourists and locals. Ringo Starr's better half Barbara Bach co-stars in a role she'd probably rather forget. With an eco-friendly storyline about the destruction of the native habitat by greedy, money-grabbing businessmen, the film suffers from hammy acting, poor direction and mind-bogglingly bad FX. One for Italian-horror completists only. Brendan Maltman

Bat For Lashes

Are you ready to fall under a wicked spell?

PRESCILLA (Single)
Out 26 February; The Echo Label

Natasha Khan was never going to grow up normal. Born into a renowned squash-playing dynasty and with mercilessly strict religious parents, she took it upon herself to pray to the aliens when her father upped and left when she was 11. Makes a bit of a change from the normal preteen activities of rolling up your school skirt and storming off to bed without eating your greens. It was then a short leap from taking a life-changing trip to San Francisco, qualifying as a nursery-school teacher, and making odd sound installations at art school, to the Brighton-based 27-year-old's current line of business: that of a storytelling conjuroress with a predilection for handclaps, gold warpaint and dressing in Joni Mitchell's gothic sister's offcuts.

Over the past year, Khan has morphed from a quirky indie footnote into one of British music's ones to watch – she's not just a freaky face, but a musical force to be reckoned with, and as essential as a trip to the underworld with Fleetwood Mac in one of their darker moods. Their much darker moods. She's already enchanted the likes of Björk, Thom Yorke and Devendra Banhart, and you'll be the next to fall under her wicked spell if you don't watch your back.

Rather fantastically, the video to her last single, the quaking yet wraithlike and chuffing fantabulous 'Prescilla', was shot in the Hollywood Hills' Bronson Caves. The Bronson Caves were manmade in the early part of last century, and have since been used as a filming location for everything from The Lone Ranger, Star Trek and Little House On The Prairie, to a number of monster B-movies – Invasion Of The Body Snatchers and Teenagers From Outer Space included – and most recognisably in the classic Adam West Batman series, as, of course, the mighty Batcave.

'Prescilla' is one of a series of glittering highlights on Khan's debut album, Fire And Gold, a record that is equal amounts wide-eyed wonder and shrewd insight, and which sounds creepier than a night in a rickety haunted house with nowt but Jimmy Saville and the Krankies for company. If you want spinechilling Shangri-Las, Khan offers the implausibly potent 'What's A Girl To Do?'. Or if it's the aural equivalent of a cold night cantering across the Yorkshire moors circa 1876 you're after, try 'Horse & I', the album's opener. To top it all, she's even covered Bruce Springsteen's smasher 'I'm On Fire' as a B-side to this single. A genius in witch's clothing. Leonie Cooper

BAT FACT

Natasha is the niece of Jahangir Khan, considered by many to be the finest squash player that ever lived. Between 1981 and 1986, he won an incredible 555 consecutive competitive matches

Bat For Lashes' fans include the likes of Björk and Thom Yorke

THURSTON MOORE
FLIPPED OUT BRIDE

Out now; Blossoming Noise
Both the tracks on this – 'Flipped Out Bride' and 'O Sweet Lanolin' – aren't much more than 10 minutes of ambient guitar noise punctuated by very little else. When this was originally released as 500 hand-numbered copies on 140g blue marbled vinyl with artwork by Kim Gordon, the whole package would have been worth owning, but as a CD it's probably not. It lacks soul, passion and emotion. James Doorne

PHILIP GLASS
NOTES ON A SCANDAL OST

Out now; Rounder
Unmistakable Glass, all depressing and foreboding. There's a bit in the film where Judi Dench walks up some steps to a house and presses a doorbell, and with this score playing you feel like you're going to have a heart attack – she's pressing a doorbell, for God's sake, but Glass makes it seem like the world's about to explode. As well as the intensity this is also, like all his best scores, utterly hypnotic and haunting – opium for the ears. Alex Godfrey

FRANK BLACK
CHRISTMASS

Out now; Cooking Vinyl
The CD comprises 20 live acoustic versions of Pixies and solo songs you probably already know, and five new tracks recorded last year. The DVD that comes with it has 13 more live tracks, with only a single song overlap, and it all sounds brilliant. Black's voice is as good as ever, the new stuff is top quality, and the songs you've heard 1,000 times sound reborn. Right now, you can only get it on iTunes and from Recordstore.co.uk/cookingvinyl. James Doorne

THE RESIDENTS
FREAK SHOW

Out now; Mute
Inspired by a mule-faced lady at the Louisiana State Fair, The Residents released 1990's Freak Show. It contained soliloquies to Harry the Head, Wanda the Worm-Woman, Jello the Boneless Boy and more, and was unique and uneasy listening. A graphic novel followed, as did a stageshow and a CD-Rom. All aspects of the award-winning project are now compiled in this mind-blowing deluxe hardbook CD/DVD format. Billy Chainsaw

YOUR MONTHLY INTRODUCTION TO THE WORLD OF OUTSIDER MUSIC

NO.16 THE RUBBISHMEN

WHO ARE THEY? Bertrand and Garcia live in a wheelie bin in London's Romilly Street, Soho. Self-proclaimed masters of the stage – and aficionados of bushy facial hair, walking sticks and tweed – The Rubbishmen have been playing their unique Victorian punk revivalist recitals since May 2006, and uploading eccentric podcasts and other digital detritus to their various webpages.

WHY SHOULD WE CARE? Like members of the original Bonzo Dog Band who've just been woken from their cryogenic slumber, The Rubbishmen skate the perilous line between theatre and rock'n'roll, creating rambling, twisted tales of cider-drinking Red Indians and men with an irrational fear of beards; gloriously silly stories that couldn't be written anywhere else except dear old Blighty. When Anthony Keidis of the Red Hot Chili Peppers saw The Rubbishmen strolling through Soho, he was heard to cry, "Hey, you guys are like the Duke of Westminster or something, man!"

WHERE ARE THEY NOW? Working on a West End musical, launching a series of monthly webcasts and, using their concept of anti-performance, failing to turn up for gigs.

Funeral

The world's unluckiest band

BAND Q&A

FROM THESE WOUNDS

Out 6 February; Tabu Recordings

Funeral were once described as "the most depressing band in the world", and you couldn't blame them if they were: From the start, tours got cancelled, business deals went bad, wheels mysteriously fell off tour buses. And then it all got a bit Final Destination. The death of guitarist Christian Loos in October last year means that, of the three founder members, only one – Anders Eek – is still alive. We pulled him aside for a sympathetic chat.

Do you feel you might be cursed?
I've thought that many times. And after Christian died I went into myself and considered stopping because I thought, "Who's going to be next?"
Do you have a lot of bad luck generally?
A lot of bad luck, yes. Definitely.
Do you think you might be literally cursed?
Who knows? Maybe somebody cursed us. Generally speaking, doom metal attracts extreme personalities. It's a special form of music, and maybe the music itself drives you mad, in a way.
Do you feel like it drives you mad?
I have this addictive relationship with the band and the music – love and hate at the same time. It's very hard writing music, but at the same time it's a great relief to get it out of your system.
How did people react when you approached them to replace dead people in the band?
Who could be next in line?
Yeah.
We have a lot of irony and humour in our music as well. Our vocalist just mentioned that maybe he's next. I think that's just a way of expressing our irony.
If someone else in the band died, would you call the whole thing off?
We have to continue the record deal, so the audience has at least two records, so I think we'd continue if anyone dared to join the band.
Do you remember breaking a mirror, walking under a ladder, walking in front of a black cat or something?
I've done that several times.
I think I've solved your problems here.
Stop it. You're tempting fate.
I have two black cats myself.
Do you walk across their path often?
All the time.
Get rid of them or, if you want to keep them, dye them a different colour.
Dye them white or whatever?
Are you going to try to tour?
People have been asking us to play in different countries for about 10 years now, so I think it's about time we did.
Have you never played outside Norway?
We've planned it, but things go wrong. We were meant to play in Holland last year, but at the last minute we got a message from the arrangers saying they couldn't afford our plane tickets, and the shows had been cancelled.
You really are the unluckiest people I know.
I'm going to mail you some rabbits' feet as soon as I put the phone down.
Thanks. It's about time we had some good luck. James Doorne

Grinderman

Nick Cave: Still crazy after all these years

BAND Q&A

GRINDERMAN

Out 5 March; Mute

In an effort to cut loose from some of the historical preconceptions that have grown around Nick Cave and The Bad Seeds, Cave and three of his cohorts – Warren Ellis, Martyn Casey and Jim Sclavunos – have formed a side-project, Grinderman. The band see the guys letting rip both in the sonic realm and experimentally, to deliver an album as strange as it is spectacular.

How far you go for more of a one-take 'live' feel with this album?
NICK CAVE: When we say 'one take', it's not a song we've rehearsed and recorded in one take. Instead, it's one take of a song that nobody really knew in the first place. Something like 'Electric Alice' – nobody knew what that song was, even when we were playing it. It's just something we recorded, then dropped a bit out of the middle and laughed, "That's fuckin' great." It was completely improvised. I think we did try and play 'Electric Alice' again, but nobody could find what it was that made that song so special the first time. I personally love that piece of music. It surprises me each time I hear it, because I really don't understand how it came about.
'Electric Alice' is a dreamlike listening experience. Do you put importance in your dreams with regard to your music?
NC: Yes. I don't write songs about my dreams, but there's certainly that feeling of displacement that you feel in dreams. In my dreams I'm separate from things – I'm observing, and I'm unaffected by things. And that feeling goes into a lot of what I write about.
MARTYN CASEY: I have performance-anxiety dreams, about playing the guitar.
Talking of displacement, 'When My Love Comes Down' sounds like a musical interpretation of those moments in movies when a character is stationary and everything is moving around them in a blur.
NC: Well, that's what my dreams are like, mate! Only women are blasting me with flamethrowers, and the flames [Cave gestures to show that the flames are stopping just in front of him, while making the noise of a flamethrower]… so I can just stand there.

THE TAO OF NICK CAVE

Long before Grinderman, Nick Cave was a king of quotes. "People think I'm a miserable sod, but it's only because I get asked such bloody miserable questions," he once moaned to an interviewer. And of his music: "I think there's a certain perversity in my music, in that I continue, you know, to eat at the same ball of vomit year after year."

CLASSIC BIZARRE ALBUMS

WEIRD CDS FROM THE VAULTS

CHRISTOPHER LEE REVELATION

Strange, maybe, to launch this series with a new release, and one to which we've already devoted four pages, but I can assure you it is absolutely, unprecedentedly NUTS. The 84-year-old actor's debut album is an incredibly deluded one, fantastically grandiose, without a shred of self-awareness.

It begins with an unreservedly pretentious version of 'The Impossible Dream', complete with spoken-word intro, a bored-sounding woman telling Lee that "The world is a dung heap, and we are maggots that crawl on it," before he lurches into the song. It perfectly sets the tone for the album, and introduces us to its primary failing, which is that, despite his claims, Christopher Lee cannot sing to save his life. On 'The Toreador March', he barely sings in time, like an elderly French man who's drunk too much wine at a party and has grabbed the microphone. Later, there's a 'metal' version of the same song, which is just confusing. He slaughters 'Silent Night', which features backing vocals by his daughter, who sounds like Nico on morphine. His American accent on 'Oh What A Beautiful Mornin'' sounds like Michael Palin singing 'The Lumberjack Song' on Monty Python. The entire album is just barmy.

It ends with Lee talking about his vocal talent. "I've always been able to sing", he explains. "It's genetic." In reality, as a singer, Lee's like one of those comedy pensioners from the X Factor auditions; yet for all his pomposity, you've got to love the fact he has recorded an album just because he wants to. And even though his singing is abysmal, Revelation's theatricality and unrestrained gusto is joyous. It is magnificently bad – but magnificent all the same. Alex Godfrey

ack and Kyle rock our fucking socks off

AMMERSMITH APOLLO, LONDON

December

ringing sleepily from under a faded Kiss duvet – n a pantomime version of the house they share sgerable Pick Of Destiny – Jack Black and Kyle are greeted by the loudest cheer I've heard in over ade of gig-going. From wide-eyed kids to grinning ersons old enough to know better, the roar from Apollo's capacity crowd is louder than Elton John's ouse, and you can actually feel the force of a ousand handslaps on the back of your neck as Black the edge of the stage to soak up the applause. ile while the dumpy duo should be ashamed for ving their movie on the world, the Apollo's feverish acclaim for their live show is thoroughly deserved. Taking 'The D' from their squalid apartment to the depths of Hades – where the Antichrist and Colonel Sanders join the band, and help challenge the Devil to a duel – JB and KG's performance is deliriously good fun, blending the time-honoured excesses of stadium rock with the visual splendour of a Broadway show. And even though many of their new songs make no sense without the accompanying videos, seeing 'Fuck Her Gently' and 'Tribute' performed live – with 10,000 people singing every word – is a sharp reminder that Black and Gass know how to knock out a great tune, and that their loving parodies of rock'n'roll are the sharpest since Spinal Tap hung up their spandex pants. David McComb

MURDER BY DEATH

THE DUBLIN CASTLE, LONDON

9 January

This ace Indiana four-piece deal in the sexiest country noir you've heard since Nick Cave last brandished a rock and threatened to dash it into his good lady's face. They sing sepia-tinged songs about Satan, getting squiffy on hard liquor and starting fires in the desert. "Here's a drinking song," growls dashingly good-looking frontman Adam Turla, before crashing into the opening bars of 'Brother', a skiffle punk anthem that's folksier than a midnight bout with The Pogues and 40 gallons of moonshine. But it's Turla's rousing voice that's the band's masterstroke, so deep it sounds like he flogged his larynx to the devil at the crossroads. They're moody buggers, but you gotta love 'em. Leonie Cooper

ALL TOMORROW'S PARTIES

BUTLINS, MINEHEAD

8-10 December

Going to a festival at Butlins is bizarre. Seeing The Stooges on a stage normally set up for Blazin' Squad is surreal, but the sight of four masked men (The New Blockaders) lined up in a cheesy bar and creating the very sound of hell is enough to send even the most open-minded over the edge. And while The Sun City Girls and Nurse With Wound aren't much fun, the misery on the faces of the Butlins barstaff makes it all worthwhile. Brett Callwood

PlayStation 3

Sadly, you'll need a mortgage to buy one...

Out March; Sony; £425 approx

Yes – that's £425 for a games console. But while Sony's latest machine is the most expensive on the block, the PS3 packs a wealth of tasty technology under the hood.

As well as the slick performance of a supercomputer, a Blu-ray disc player that supports high-definition gaming and movies, and a hard drive that allows you to download games from the internet, the PS3 is also backwards compatible, meaning you'll still be play all your old PS2 discs. But unless you're a Premier League footballer, crack dealer or Lotto winner, this shiny new machine will be out of most people's reach until the price inevitably crashes around Christmas time. Still, here are a few things you might want to spend some cash on.

ESISTANCE: ALL OF MAN

PS3; £49.99; Out March

...ence is the one we've all been waiting ...e only game that really stands out in the ...predictable launch library. As a balls-...ele-style blaster it's an electrifying ...ence, pitching players against hundreds ...some monsters and allowing you take ...ction online and challenge 40 human ... The action takes few risks with the ...g genre, but Resistance is still the ...best game so far. David McComb

VIRTUA FIGHTER 5

PS3; £49.99; Out March

Using every ounce of the PlayStation 3's graphical muscle, this is the best looking Virtua Fighter yet, with millions of brutal, beautifully-animated attacks, epic battle arenas and lifelike fighters who sweat, wince and grunt as the fierce fisticuffs unfold. But while it all looks great, the game is virtually identical to previous editions on other consoles, and unfortunately holds few surprises for fans of Sega's legendary series. David McComb

ALSO OUT

Here are a few more PS3 titles set to hit stores at the same time as the console. Expect this line-up to change, though. All these games should set you back around £50.

- NBA 07
- Genji: Days Of The Blade
- Blazing Angels: Squadrons Of WWII
- Call Of Duty 3
- Fight Night Round 3
- The Elder Scrolls IV: Oblivion
- F.E.A.R.
- Full Auto 2: Battlelines
- Madden NFL 07
- Marvel Ultimate Alliance

MOTORSTORM

PS3; £49.99; Out March

One of the dirtiest off-road racers in gaming history, Motorstorm is packed with filthy thrills. The insane action sees you commandeering a huge variety of vehicles – from motorbikes to hulking big rigs – and burning across an expansive desert; but as every machine acts in exactly the same way as it would in the real world, taking pole position takes a lot of practice. It's a little rough around the edges, but Motorstorm is still a blast. David McComb

Glenn Barr's Haunted Paradise

Smoky cities, muted colours and slinky women

Glenn Barr
Last Gasp Publishing

Glenn Barr has been creating smudgy, stingy glimpses of city life for almost three decades. This anthology of his paintings, photographs and sketches provides a window on his obsessions: Americana, the night, and women. And we mean women, not girls – all smoky lips, ruffled lips and beehives, Barr's ladies make his pictures spring to life. They smoke impossibly long cigarettes, and cut freakishly elegant figures, even when they're sprawled on beds or preparing backstage at a strip joint. Barr's hometown of Detroit provides the oily, smoky, muted, sometimes surreal backdrop to his work, contrasting with the photographs of his bright vintage plastic toys and fairgrounds that run alongside his paintings. This beautifully put together glossy hardback book is a joy to flick through, or to savour hungrily.

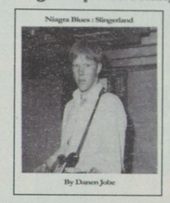
RYU MURAKAMI
Bloomsbury; £10

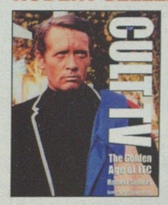
Japanese literary legend Murakami, cult author of In The Miso Soup, comes on like a pared-down Bret Easton Ellis in his latest work, a sense-searing tale about the extremes to which a man goes to curb his desire to skewer his newborn daughter with an icepick. For the strong-stomached only. Billy Chainsaw

NIAGRA BLUES: SLINGERLAND
DANEN JOBE
Singlecellpress.co.uk; £6



A fictionalised biography of outsider bluesman Jandek, Niagra Blues is a surprisingly gripping read. Like Jandek's music, Danen Jobe's writing is pure and direct, and while his prose may seem amateurish at times, stick with it and you'll become absorbed in this very American tale of broken families, no-horse towns and feral siblings. David McComb

CULT TV: THE GOLDEN AGE OF ITC
ROBERT SELLERS



Plexus; £14.99
During the 1960s and 70s, British TV was awash with the coolest in cult viewing. This is an in-depth look at ITC, the company responsible for such fantastical fare as Stingray, Randall And Hopkirk (Deceased), and The Prisoner. Profusely illustrated and informatively written, the book scores highly by being as entertaining as the programmes it lovingly dissects. Billy Chainsaw
